PREFACE

TO THE

THIRD EDITION.

THIS edition, though revised with great care, practically reproduces its forerunners of 1888 and 1889. A small quantity of new matter added to the "Theoretical Part," or Grammar proper, for completeness' sake, has been absorbed into the old paragraphs without disturbing their order. Thus, references to the Colloquial Handbook in a manual of Japanese writing which the author has in view, will be equally intelligible to students, whichever edition they may happen to possess. In the "Practical Part," or Reader, one or two pieces that had lost their interest have been dropped, and a new piece—an extract from the debates in the Imperial Diet—has been substituted.

Thanks are due to many correspondents—some of them personally unknown to the author—for corrections and suggestions. Similar criticism will always be gratefully received in the future; for in the case of a language so exceptionally difficult as Japanese, the utmost that any grammarian, however painstaking, can hope to produce necessarily falls far short of the ideal, and here, if anywhere, the saying holds good that in multitude of counsellors there is safety.

ii PREFACE.

Such students as desire to pass beyond modern colloquial practice into the field of philological research are recommended to peruse Mr. Aston's Grammar of the Fapanese Written Language,—an admirably lucid work embodying all the best results obtained by the native school of grammarians,—and the present writer's Essay in Aid of a Grammar and Dictionary of the Luchuan Language ("Trans. Asiat. Soc. of Japan," Vol. XXIII. Suppl.), wherein an attempt has been made to attack some of the problems of Japanese philology from the outside.

THEORETICAL PART.

HANDBOOK

COLLOQUIAL JAPANESE.

Introductory Remarks.

¶ 1. "How can I learn to speak Japanese?"—This question has been so often addressed to the present writer that he has resolved to put his answer into a permanent shape. He is persuaded that no language was ever learnt solely from a grammar,—least of all a language like Japanese, whose structure and idioms are so alien from all that we are accustomed to in Europe. The student is therefore recommended only to glance through the Theoretical Part at first, in order to obtain a general idea of the territory he has to conquer. He can pick up by the way such of the examples as strike him, committing them to memory and seeking opportunities for using them to his servants and his native teacher. He should then go on to the Practical Part, and attack the "Fragments of Conversation" and the "Anecdotes" as soon as possible, however baffling it may seem to be confronted with such long sentences. After all, as Japanese consists chiefly of long sentences, one cannot too early decide to face them. A little practice will rob them of much of their terror. Every now and then the Theoretical Part should be consulted on difficult points. It should be read through carefully, a little at a time, after a diligent study of the Practical Part and a committal of a few pages of the latter to memory shall have caused the student to make some way in the mastery of the language.

¶ 2. The necessity for memorising cannot be too strongly insisted upon. It is the sole means of escape from the pernicious habit of thinking in English, translating every sentence literally from a whispered English original, and therefore beginning and ending by speaking English Japanese instead of Japanese Japanese. It is not only that the words and idioms of Japanese differ from our English words and idioms, but that the same set of circumstances does not always draw from Japanese speakers remarks similar to those which it would draw from European speakers. Japanese thoughts do not run in quite the same channels as ours. To take a very simple instance. If an Englishman wishes to make a polite remark to a friend about the latter's sick father, he will probably say, "I hope your father is better to-day." In French, German, Italian, etc., the phrase would be pretty nearly the same. In each of these languages the same kindly hope would be expressed. In Japanese it is different. The phrase must run thus:

Olottsan 70a. dō de gozaimasú ? Honourable-father-Mr. us-for. how is: or, more politely, Goshimtu ikaga 7847. de irasshaimasii 2 August real-father as-for, hour deigns-to-be?

The idea of hoping or fearing, which to us is so familiar, does not present itself with the same vividness and frequency to the less anxious, less high-strung Far-Eastern mind. The characteristic phrase here is rather the ever-recurring fatalistic

The student should endeavour to place himself from the outset at the Japanese point of view. This he can do only by dint of much learning by heart. The trouble thus taken will be of infinite advantage to him, even if his ultimate aim be the indoctrination of the Japanese with foreign ideas. It will put him in sympathy with his hearers. It is true that, of late, English idioms have begun to penetrate into the Japanese language. But it is chiefly into the language of the lecture-hall and the committee-room. The style of familiar every-day speech is not likely ever to be much affected by this new influence.

¶ 3. It is still doubtful under what family of languages Japanese, with its sister-tongue Luchuan, spoken in a little archipelago to the south between Kyūshū and Formosa, should be classed. There is no relationship between these and Aino, the speech of the hairy aborigines whom the Japanese conquerors have gradually pushed eastwards and northwards. In structure, though not to any appreciable extent in vocabulary, Japanese closely resembles Korean; and both it and Korean may possibly be related to Mongol and to Manchu, and may therefore claim to be included in the Altaïc group. Be this as it may, Japanese is what is generally termed an agglutinative language, that is to say, it builds up its words and grammatical forms by means of suffixes loosely soldered to the root or stem. It also shows faint traces of the "law of vowel harmony" or "attraction," which characterises the Altaïc languages. This manifests itself in a tendency to uniformity in the vowels of successive syllables, as ototoshi, "the year before last," for ato toshi. Similarly in several of the words recently adopted from English, such as mishin, "a (sewing-) machine;" Gotto, "(the Christian) God;" bukku, "a (European)book."

¶ 4. The earliest Japanese literature that has come down to us dates, in its present form, from the beginning of the eighth century after Christ. The general structure of the language at that time was nearly the same as it is now; but the changes of detail have been so numerous that a page of eighth century Japanese is unintelligible to a modern native of Tōkyō without special study. One of the chief factors in the alteration of the language has been the gradual infiltration of Chinese words and phrases, which naturally accompanied the borrowing of Buddhism, Confucianism, and the various arts and sciences of China. Chinese established itself, so to speak, as the Latin and Greek of Japan. It retains this position even at the present day, supplying names for almost all the new implements, sciences, and ideas; which are being introduced from Europe and America. In this manner, one very curious and quite unexpected result of the Europeanisation of Japan has been the flooding of the language with Chinese terms at a rate never known before. Thus we have:

                                          "a railway train."
               "people-authority,"

- ¶ 5. The Japanese do not pronounce Chinese in a manner that would be intelligible to any Chinaman. They have two standards of pronunciation, both of which are corruptions of. the Chinese pronunciation of over a thousand years ago. One of these is called the Go-on, the other the Kan-on, from the names of certain ancient Chinese kingdoms. Usage decrees that the same word shall be pronounced according to the Go-on in some contexts, and according to the Kan-on in others. Thus the $my\bar{o}$ of $dai-my\bar{o}$, "a feudal noble" (lit. "a great name"), is the same as the mei of mei-butsu, "the chief production of a locality '(lit. "a name-thing," i.e. "a famous thing"). In this case myō is the Go-on, and mei the Kan-on, of the same Chinese character 名, which in China itself is pronounced ming. The practical student will do best to learn words by rote, without troubling himself as to whether each term, if Chinese, be in the Go-on or in the Kan-on.
- ¶ 6. The effect of the steady influx of Chinese words during more than a millennium has been to discredit the native Japanese equivalents even when they exist. A foreigner who wishes to be considered an elegant speaker should, therefore, gradually accustom himself to employ Chinese words very freely, except when addressing uneducated persons. He should, for instance, prefer jin-ryoku(suru), "to endeavour," to chikara wo tsŭkusu. myō-chō, "to-morrow morning," to ashĭta no asa. sak-kon, "yesterday and to-day," to kinō to kyō to. tai-boku, "a large tree," to ōki na ki.

CHINESE

JAPANESE

Wa-sei, "Japanese make," to Nihon-deki.

Some thoughtful persons, both Japanese and foreign, regret the fashionable preference for Chinese words. But the fashion exists, and to follow it is considered a mark of refinement; neither is it possible, even were it desirable, for an outsider to set up a standard of his own, different from that acknowledged by the people themselves. The copiousness of the Chinese tongue, and the marvellous terseness which generally enables it to express in two or three syllables ideas which would require five or six in Japanese and indeed in almost any other language, form an argument in favour of this species of Japanese Johnsonianism. On the other hand, much confusion is caused by the fact that numbers of Chinese words are pronounced alike. The consequence of this is that it is often impossible to know what a term means, without reference to the Chinese characters with which it is written. In any case, whether he speak simply or learnedly, the student should at least avoid speaking vulgarly. Japanese resembles English in being full of slang and vulgarisms of every sort. But what should we say to a young Japanese, who, having been sent to London to learn our language, should return home with the haccent of 'Ighgate and the diction of the street Arab? Japanese has also many provincial dialects, some of which remain more faithful in certain respects to the traditions of the Classical language than does the dialect of Tokyo. But the dialect of Tökyö (itself a slightly modified form of the Kyöto dialect, which was formerly considered the standard Colloquial) has on its side an ever-increasing importance and preponderance. as the general medium of polite intercourse throughout the country. Practical students are strongly advised to devote themselves to it alone. If they speak it well, they will be as generally understood as a man who speaks standard English is generally understood in England, that is to say, they will be understood everywhere by all but the peasantry, and in most provinces even by the peasantry.

- ¶ 7. Japanese writing consists of the Chinese characters, ideographs, as they are sometimes styled because representing sense not sound, whole words not individual letters,mixed with a syllabic writing called the Kana. Speaking generally, the Chinese characters serve to figure all the principal words of the sentence, such as nouns, adjectives, and verbs, while the function of the Kana syllables interspersed throughout the text is to transcribe phonetically such lesser elements as particles and grammatical terminations. We cannot here treat any further of this important subject, important because Japanese, like every language boasting a long history and extensive literature, may be said to live and move and have its being in its written system. desirous of pursuing it can avail themselves either of our work mentioned in the preface, or of one of the "Readers" compiled for use in the primary schools, for instance, the "Shin-tai Toku-hon," published by the Kinkodo at Tōkyō. The characters may advantageously be attacked very soon after the Colloquial, say, as soon as oral communication between the student and his native teacher has become established in however lame a way.
- ¶ 8. A peculiarly intricate system of writing is not the only barrier that divides the Colloquial from the language of books. The Japanese still remain at the stage in which we were during the Middle Ages. They do not write as they speak, but use an antiquated and indeed partly artificial dialect whenever they put pen to paper. This is the so-called "Written Language." Of the few books published in the Colloquial, the best are the novels of a living author named Enchö. The student who does not wish to trouble about the characters, cannot do better than write out one of these books from his teacher's dictation. It should be added that they contain not a few passages to which lady students would take just exception. This is the case with all Japanese fiction. It is not that the Japanese novelists love to wallow, Zola-like, in vice. On the contrary, their sentiments mostly leave nothing to be desired. But they have a startlingly realistic way of calling a spade a spade. The titles of Enchö's two best works are:—

- "Botan-Dôrô," the story of a last century vendetta.
- "Ezo-Nishĭki Kokyō no Jezuto, an adaptation to modern Japanese social conditions of Wilkie Collins' "New Magdalen."

There is a periodical entitled "Hyak-kwa-en," which prints Enshi's and other popular story-tellers' pieces verbatim. Occasionally, too, the newspapers and the "Transactions" of the Educational, Geographical, and other learned Societies reproduce a lecture exactly as taken down by the short-hand writer from the mouth of the lecturer, and the reports of the debates in the Imperial Diet are given verbatim in the "Official Gazette" (Kwampo). The more usual practice, however, is to dress everything up in the Written Style before it is allowed to appear in print.

¶ 9. A word as to the parts of speech in Japanese. Strictly speaking, there are but two, the verb and the noun. The particles, or "postpositions" and suffixes, which take the place of our prepositions, conjunctions, and conjugational terminations, were themselves originally fragments of nouns.

and verbs. The pronoun and numeral are simply nouns. The true adjective (including the adverb) is a sort of neuter verb. But many words answering to our adjectives and adverbs are nouns in Japanese. There is no article. Altogether our grammatical categories do not fit the Japanese language well. They have only been adhered to in this work in so far as they may serve as familiar landmarks.

¶ 10. In conclusion, the following warnings concerning errors into which European speakers of Japanese are apt to fall, may be found useful:—

Do not confound long and short vowels. (Sec ¶ 13.)

Do not use personal pronouns too freely. (See ¶ 71.)

Do not insert the postposition no between a true adjective and the noun to which it belongs. (See ¶ 208.)

Do not apply honorifics to yourself. For me to ask any one, for instance, to shinjo something to myself, or to haiken something belonging to myself, would be as if I should say: "Have the honour to give it to me," or "Have the honour to look at this thing belonging to me." As explained in Chap. XI, honorifics can only be applied to other people, while contrariwise humble terms must be used in speaking of oneself. I shinjō (lit. "respectfully lift up") something to you; but I ask you to kudasai (lit. "condescend") something to me. I hatken (lit. "adoringly look at") something belonging to you; but I ask you to goran nasai (lit. "august-glance deign") something belonging to me. (See ¶ 405.) If you hear beggars in the street shouting after you to shinjo a copper to them, it is only because, having learnt from experience that foreigners constantly misuse the honorifics, they think to ingratiate themselves and to be more easily understood by doing likewise. Were they addressing a Japanese, they would never dream of saying anything so rude and so absurd.

CHAPTER II.

Pronunciation and Letter-Changes.

PRONUNCIATION.

- ¶ 11. Japanese, when written phonetically with the Roman alphabet, according to the phonetic spelling sanctioned by Hepburn's and Brinkley's dictionaries, requires the same letters as English, with the exception of l, q, v, and x. The letter c occurs only in the combination ch, which is sounded nearly like English ch in "church," but a little more softly, as cha, "tea;" chichi, "milk."
 - N. B. Dr. Hepburn's system, which practically coincides with that recommended by the Royal Geographical Society for the transcription of hitherto unromanised languages generally, has established itself in [almost universal local use by reason of its simplicity. Not a few authors have, it is true, deviated on minor points, either from inadvertence or in order to satisfy their individual notions of phonetic perfection. Probably no language admits of being written phonetically with absolute precision; and the present writer, for one, gladly sacrifices some minute personal preferences for the sake of what is far more important in such a case,—unity of usage.
- ¶ 12. The vowels are sounded as in Spanish and Italian, but are always short, unless marked with the sign of long quantity. It is impossible to express the values of the Japanese vowels correctly in English; but, speaking approximately, we may say that a resembles the a in "father," but is shorter.

      c
      ,, e
      "men."

      i
      ,, i
      "machine," but is shorter.

      o
      ,, o
      "for" (not "four").

      u
      ,, u
      "bush."

      \bar{v}
      ,, o
      "bone," but is a purer o.

      \bar{u}
      ,, o
      "food."

¶ 13. Very great care must be taken to distinguish the short from the long vowels; for there are many words totally distinct in meaning, but differing, so far as pronunciation is concerned, merely in the quantity of their vowels, thus:

doz\bar{o}, "a mud godown;"*d\bar{o}zo, "please."koko, "here;"k\bar{o}k\bar{o}, "filial piety."sato, "a village;"sat\bar{o}, "sugar."toru, "to take;"t\bar{o}ru, "to pass through."tsuji, "a cross-road;ts\bar{u}ji, "an interpreter."zutsu, "[one, etc.] at a time;"zuts\bar{u}, "a headache."

The only long vowels of common occurrence are \bar{v} and \bar{u} . Long \bar{a} hardly occurs, excepting in the interjections $\bar{a} / m\bar{a} / n\bar{a} / n\bar$

¶ 14. When preceded by another vowel or by n, the vowels e, i, and o are pronounced ye, yi, and wo respectively. Thus ue, "above;" kon-in, "marriage;" and shio, "salt," are pronounced (and by some transliterators written) uye, konyin, shiwo.

^{* &}quot;Godown" is Far-Eastern English for a store-house or warehouse. It comes from the Malay word galdong, "a warehouse."

¶ 15. I and u are often inaudible, or nearly so in the mouths of natives of Tōkyō after f, h, k, s, sh, and ts, as pronounced I flatsu, or "two."

fulatsu,
                                                flats.
               "person," hto *
hito.
watakushi,
                                                 zvatakshi.
               "much," "many,"
takusan.
                                                 taxan
               "there is."
gozaimasu, gozaimas.
               "below,"
shila.
                                                 shla.
               "the moon," tski.
tsuki.

¶ 16. Initial u is silent, and the following m doubled in the pronunciation of the four words

uma,"a horse,"pronounced mma.umai,"nice,",, mmai.umareru,"to be born,",, mmareru.ume,"a plum-tree,",, mme.

- ¶ 17. The quiescent vowels are distinguished in this work by the sign of short quantity, as hito, shita, takisan, ima. But it should be noted that the Japanese themselves are not conscious of failing to pronounce the is and us in question, and that these letters often recover their proper power for the sake of clearness or emphasis. They count in prosody, and are always sounded even in ordinary conversation by the natives of many provinces. That is why they are allowed to remain in the transliteration, most persons writing them without any diacritical mark.
- ¶ t8. The vowel u, when following sh or j, is often mispronounced as i by the Tōkyō people, thus:

teishi, for teishu, "a husband."

^{*} The h here has the sound of German ch in ich.

They are also apt to mispronounce yu as i, thus:

iki, for yuki, "snow;" but this is distinctly vulgar.

¶ 19. Be very careful to discriminate final e from final i. Englishmen are often unintelligible owing to their confounding such words as sake, "rice-beer," and saki, "front," "before." take, "a bamboo;", taki, "a waterfall." yume, "a dream;", yumi, "a bow."

- ¶ 20. The diphthongs ae, ai, ao, au, ei, *oi, ui, call for no remark, each vowel retaining its own proper sound, as in Spanish or Italian. Englishmen and Germans must beware of mispronouncing ei as in "eiderdown" or German "klein." Japanese ei being simply e+i, the second syllable of such a word as kirei, "pretty," sounds nearly like the English word "ray" or the German "Reh," not at all like "rye." Be equally careful not to give to au (a+u) the peculiarly English sound of "awe;" but pronounce, for instance, kau, "to buy," very nearly like English "cow." In the case of verbs, however, ending in au, such as kau, "to buy; morau, "to receive; shilagau, "to follow," it is optional to pronounce the letter au like a long ō. But this is more characteristic of western Japanese than of Tōkyō usage.
- ¶ 21. The vulgar in Tōkyō say at for ae, and of for oe; thus mai, instead of mae, "before;" koi (which means "love"), instead of koe, "voice." They also often contract ai into a long ē, as naranē for naranai, "it won't do." But this is as bad as the dropping of the letter h by cockneys.
- ¶ \$2. It is usual to write iu (rather than $y\bar{u}$) in the case of the verb meaning "to say."
 - N. B. This is a concession to etymology, the other tenses being itte, itta, etc., with initial i.

It is usual to write ou rather than \bar{o} in the case of verbs like omou, "to think;" sorou, "to be in order."

- N, B. This is done in order to show the original and theoretical conformity of these verbs to the general rule whereby the present tense fmust always end in n.
- ¶ 23. The consonants are pronounced approximately as in English, subject to the following remarks:—

F is a true labial, not the English labio-dental; that is to say, it is formed by means of the lips alone, not, as our f is, by placing the upper teeth on the lower lip.

G never has the sound of j. At the beginning of a word it is pronounced hard, like the g in "give." In the middle of a word it has the sound of English ng in "slangy." Thus Kiga, the name of a place near Miyanoshĭta, rhymes almost exactly with "singer." (Not with "finger," where the ng does double duty, first to render the sound of ng, and then the sound of g alone. This double sound is represented in Japanese by the combination ng, as kin-gin, "gold and silver," pronounced kin-ghin). Foreigners constantly err in pronouncing such words as Kiga like Kinner or else Kigger, instead of uttering the nasal sound of "slangy," "singer," "Bingham," etc.

A', B. In western Japan, g retains its bard pronunciation in all situations.

H is pronounced as in English, except before the vowel i, when it assumes nearly the sound of the German ch in ich. The syllable hi has, "moreover, a tendency to pass into shi and even into simple sh, especially in the mouths of the vulgar of Tōkyō, who pronounce, for instance, the word hige, "beard," as shige, and hito, "person," as shio. Careful Japanese speakers attempt (not always successfully) to avoid this error.

N final is pronounced half-way between a true n and the French nasal n. When (as happens chiefly in Chinese compounds) a syllable ending in n is followed by a or u in the next syllable, the n sounds very nearly like English ng, and a distinct hiatus is made before the vowel. Thus gen-an (almost geng an), "the draft of a document,"—quite different from ge-nan, which may equally well be written genan, "a man-servant." When the vowel next to n final is e, i, or o, a different method is resorted to (see ¶ 14).

R is the very softest of English r's, and is never rolled or gargled as in French and German. Some speakers pronounce it almost as if it were a dental d, especially before the vowel i.

S is always sharp as in "past," never assuming the soft or z sound heard in "misery."

¶ 24. W (pronounced exactly as in English) shows so strong a tendency to become obsolete after k and g, not only in Tōkyō, but in most parts of the country excepting the west, that it is optional to write, for instance, kwashi or kashi, "cake;" Gwaimushō or Gaimushō, "the Foreign Office." Even between two vowels, as in omo-(w)anai, "I do not think;" kama(w)anai, "it does not matter," many natives of Tōkyō drop it. In the present work the w has been retained in all such cases, in order to conform to the usage of the dictionaries. Frenchmen, Germans, and other Continentals are apt to sound a v instead of a w. This bad habit should be carefully guarded against.

Y is always a consonant. Thus the syllable mya in myaku, "the pulse," is pronounced as one syllable, like mia in the English word "amiable." Care must be taken not to confound the monosyllable mya with the dissyllable miya in such words as miyako (mi-ya-ko), "a capital eity."

Z, when preceding the vowel u, has the sound of dz, and is accordingly so written by many transliterators, as midzu, for mizu, "water." We write z in this work, rather than dz, somewhat against our personal preference, and merely in order to conform to the usage of the dictionaries. (Conf. second foot-note to p. 21.)

¶ 25. Double? consonants must, as in Italian, be sharply distinguished from single ones, thus:

ana, "a hole;" anna, "such."
ichi, "one;" itchi (for ichi-chi), "union."
oto, "a sound:" otto. "a husband."

N. B. Though plenty of consonants are written double in English, few are pronounced so. Such words, however, as "bookkeeping," "unneighbourly," missent, will serve to exemplify the peculiar insistance on the consonantal sound that is here spoken of.

Where, however, no confusion is liable to ensue, the natives of Tōkyō often pronounce as double a consonant which is properly single, thus:

ammari, for amari, "too mueh."
minna, ,, mina, "all."
tokkuri, tokuri, "a bottle."

This peculiarity, which seems to have originated in a desire for emphasis, is slightly vulgar.

- N. B. Only the following consonants are liable to reduplication: ch(tch), k, m, n, p, s, sh(ssh), and ts (tts).
- ¶ 26. All Japanese words theoretically end either in a vowel or in the consonant n. But the fact of the occasional quiescence of i and i produces the impression that there are words ending in other consonants. Thus, the polite termination masu (e.g. in arimasu, "there is") mostly sounds like mas, excepting in the mouths of unusually careful or old-fashioned speakers. In no other case is the clipping of final vowels to be recommended.

ACCENT.

¶ 27. Generally speaking, the Japanese pronunciation both of vowels and of consonants is less broad and heavy than that current in most European languages, and especially in English. Particularly noticeable is the manner in which ch, j, sh, and ts are minced. Tones, such as those of the Chinese, are entirely absent. There is little or no tonic accent, and only a very slight rhetorical accent; that is to say that all the syllables of a word and all the words of a sentence are pronounced equally, or nearly so. Students must beware of importing into Japanese the strong and constantly recurring stress by which, in English and in most European languages, one syllable in every polysyllabic word, and the chief words in every sentence, are singled out for special notice. Thus, to quote the names of places familiar to every traveller in Japan, you must articulate Hakone, Miyanoshita, Ashinoyu, with every syllable equal (excepting the i of Miyanoshita, which quiesces), thus: Ha-ko-ne, Mi-ya-no-shta, A-shi-no-yu, all short and all without emphasis. Europeans excruciate Japanese ears when they say Hakone, Miyanoshta, and Ashinoyu. Only occasionally, among the lower classes, does the desire for exceptional emphasis cause a word or syllable to be accented in a peculiarly declamatory manner, which Europeans find difficulty in imitating. The strength of the entire body seems to be concentrated on the production, on the laborious squeezing out, of the word in question, $N.\ B_{\bullet}$ The statement made in the above paragraph concerning the absence of accent in Japanese is intended rather for purposes of practical instruction than of scientific accuracy. There is a slight tonic accent in Japanese. But so extremely slight is it that it has never been marked in any dictionary whether native or foreign, it has no influence on prosody, it varies from province to province, and inhabitants of the same province contradict, not only each other, but themselves in their usage and in the explanations which they give concerning it. Most of the $T\bar{o}$ ky \bar{o} people distinguish by a faint difference of stress such pairs of words as áme,

      "rain;"
      amé,
      "a kind of sweetmeat."

      háshi,
      "chopsticks;"
      hashi,
      "a bridge."

      káki,
      "an oyster;"
      kakí,
      "a persimmon."

      kóto,
      "a sort of harp;"
      kotó,
      "a thing."

      kúmo,
      "a spider;"
      kumó,
      "a cloud."

      tíke,
      "a mountain-peak;"
      také,
      "a bamboo."

The difference between such words may be compared—not in kind, but in degree—with that made by careful English speakers between "morning" and "mourning," or between the verb "to advocate" and the substantive "an advocate," the verb "to elaborate" and the adjective "elaborate," or again between two such phrases as "re-covering an old umbrella" and "recovering a stolen one." The interest of the question is rather for the theoretical than for the practical student. The tendency of Englishmen, and indeed of all Europeans excepting Frenchmen, is always to accentuate Japanese much too strongly. New-comers cannot do better, at least for the first few years, than endeavour not to accentuate it at all.

LETTER-CHANGES.

- ¶ 28. Nigori, lit. "muddling," is the name given by the Japanese to the substitution of sonant consonants for surds.
 - N. B. In contradistinction to the sonant letters (d, g, z, etc.), the surd letters (t, k, s, etc.) are said to be sumi, i.e. "clear." The two categories together are termed sei-daku by the native grammarians, sei being the Chinese word for "clear," and daku for "muddled."

The consonants affected change as follows:-

Surds.		Sonants
$\begin{cases} ch \\ sh \end{cases}$	into	j .*
$ \begin{cases} f \\ h \end{cases} (anciently probably p) $,,	в.
k	,,	g.
t	,,	d.

The broad law governing the use of the nigori is that the initial surd (ch, sh, f, h, k, s, ts, or t) of an independent word—especially of a noun—changes into the corresponding sonant (j, b, g, z, or d) when the word is used as the second member of a compound. The law affects, not native words only, but likewise those borrowed from the Chinese. Thus:

From ryōri, "cookery," and chaya, "a tea-house," is formed ryōri-jaya, "an eating-house."

From shima, "an island," repeated, is formed shimajima, "various islands."

From yane, "a roof," and fune, "a vessel," is formed yane-bune, "a house-boat."

^{*} In western Japan, where the rules and analogies of the ancient language have been more faithfully preserved than in the present capital, the nigori of ch is pronounced like English j, and the nigori of sh like the softer French j; thus fuji, "the wistaria" (hard), but Fuji, "Fusiyama" (soft). The Tökyö pronunciation ignores] this delicate distinction, and has English j (but just a trifle softer) for both alike.

[†] In the western provinces (following ancient usage), the nigori of s is z, while the nigori of ts is dz; thus mizu, "not seeing," but midzu, "water." In Tökyö these two sounds are confounded, both being alike pronounced as dz. Conf. the end of ¶ 24, page 18.

- From hi, "fire," and hachi, "a pot," is formed hi-bachi, "a brazier."
- From the "indefinite forms" of the verbs kiru, "to wear," and kaeru, "to change," is formed ki-gae, "a change of clothes."
- From kaku, "an angle," and satō, "sugar," is formed kaku-zatō, "loaf-sugar."
- From tsŭki, "moon," "month," and sue, "end," is formed tsŭki-zue, "the end of the month."
- From kwan, a Chinese word signifying a "jar" or "gallipot," but not used alone in Japanese,* and the indefinite form of the verb tsumeru, "to pack," is formed kwan-zume, "tinned (provisions)," "canned things."
- From ōrai, "a thoroughfare," and the indefinite form of the verb tomeru, "to stop" (trans.), is formed ŏrai-dome, "no thoroughfare."
- N. B. Nigori'ed syllables are not limited to compounds. Kaze, "wind;" abura, "oil," and numerous others offer examples of the occurrence of the nigori in the middle of a simple word. The nigori is also found at the beginning of many simple words in modern Colloquial, but it may then almost always be traced to the action of phonetic decay. Thus de, "by," is from Classical nite; dore? "which?" is from Classical id(z)ure; and so on. Many other words with initial nigori come from the Chinese, such as dozō, "a godown;" go, "august;" zashīki, "a room," etc.
- ¶ 29. A rider to the above law is that f and h in Chinese compounds sometimes change, not into b, but into p. This is called the han-nigori, or "half-muddling." Thus, to take somewhat high-flown instances, ^{*} Sir Ernest Satow suggests that this word kwan, though fitted by Japanese ingenuity with a suitable Chinese ideograph (離), may, after all, be nothing but the English word "can" itself, whose meaning it serves to convey.

- From jun, "to accord," and $\mathbf{f}\bar{u}$, "wind," we have jum- $\mathbf{p}\bar{u}$, "a fair wind."
- From ten, "heaven," and hen, "change," we have tem-pen, "a sign in the heavens."
- N. B. The monosyllables jun and $f\bar{u}$ are scarcely ever used alone in Japanese in the senses here given. For the change of n to m in jun and ten, see ¶ 32.
- ¶ 30. In some words of native origin, the Tōkyō people, led by the same love of reduplication which makes them say minna for mina, "all;" tokkuri for tokuri, "a bottle," etc. (see ¶ 25), turn the letter h, which could not well be doubled, into what commends itself to them as the nearest approach to hh, viz. pp; thus:

yappari, for yahari, "also." yoppodo, ,, yohodo, "a lot," "very."

- N. B. Perhaps it might be more correct to view this phenomenon as a relic of the old pronunciation of h as p. Conf. ¶ 28, top of p. 21, small type in middle of column.
- ¶ 31. The law regulating the use of the nigori is by no means an absolute one, euphony and sometimes the varying caprice of individuals deciding in each case whether the change shall or shall not be made. Thus \bar{o} , "great," and saka, "a hill," compounded to form the name of a large town in Central Japan, may be pronounced either \bar{O} zaka or \bar{O} saka (never Osárkur, as Englishmen are apt to say). F and h, however, always change either into b or into p, if the first member of the compound ends in a nasal consonant. Thus it would be inadmissable to say jum-fū for jum-pū.

It is considered harsh to have many nigori'ed letters in one word. For instance, as kaze, "wind," already has the nigori'ed letter z, it will, when combined with kami,

- "above," make kaza-kami, "windward," not kaza-gami, which would sound awkward and thick. Observe, too, that no nigori ed letter is ever doubled.
- ¶ 32. As shown by the examples of $ju\mathbf{m}-p\bar{u}$ and $te\mathbf{m}-pen$, n changes to m before a labial. To give another instance: " $te\mathbf{m}-mon\cdot gaku$," "astrology," "astronomy;" from $te\mathbf{n}$, "heaven;" mon, "markings or letters" (not used alone); and gaku, "science."—N or m is sometimes inserted corruptly by careless speakers, as shamberi for shaberi, "chattering;" $yon-j\bar{u}$ for $yo-j\bar{u}$ (better $shi-j\bar{u}$), "forty." They make up for this by dropping n where it should be retained, saying, for instance, daiko instead of daikon, "a radish."
- ¶ 33. Less important than the nigori affecting initial consonants, is a change which affects the final vowels in certain native Japanese words of one syllable and two syllables. In this class of words, e final often changes to a, when the word is used as the first member of a compound,* thus:
 - From kaze, "wind," and kami, "above," we have kaza-kami, "windward."
 - From sake, "rice-beer," and ya, "a house," we have saka-ya, "a grog-shop."
 - From te, "the hand," and motsu, to hold," we have tamotsu, "to keep."
 - From ue, "top," and the indefinite form of kiru, "to put on," "to wear," we have uwa-gi," an over-coat."

^{*} Strictly speaking, it is a which is weakened into c, a study of the older language showing that the forms in a are almost certainly the original ones. We state the rule as in the text simply for the sake of practical convenience.

As an irregular member of the same class may be mentioned shira for shiro, the stem of the adjective shiroi, "white," in such compounds as shira-giku, "a white chrysanthemum." (Kiku="chrysanthemum.")

- shira-ga, "white hair." (Ga here stands for ke, "hair." The language offers no other instance of so anomalous a change.)
- ¶ 34. All the Japanese consonants do not admit of being sounded before all the five Japanese vowels. F only occurs before the vowel u, the other four vowels taking h instead. S is replaced by sh, and a by j, before the vowel i. T is replaced by ch, and d by j, before the vowel i; l is replaced by ls, and l by l, before the vowel l. l occurs only before the vowel l; l only before the vowels l, l, and l. The sole exceptions, according to the orthography adopted in this work, are those offered by the postpositions l0 and l2. Compare, however, ¶ 14.
 - N. B. The phenomena mentioned in this paragraph seem to be of comparatively modern growth, though they can be traced back some three centuries. The archaic form of the language probably possessed f (or rather p), s, and t, but no b, h, sh, f, ch, ts, or z.

To the practical student the peculiarity above noted is interesting only in so far as it affects the conjugation of verbs. He is therefore referred to Chapter VIII, ¶ 235 et seq. It may, however, be worth while to instance in passing the strange alterations introduced into borrowed European words by this inability of the Japanese to pronounce certain consonants before certain vowels, by their further inability to pronounce combinations of consonants or any final consonant except n, and by the absence from their language of some of the commonest chifusu. from pronunciation of man "typhus." garasu, from "glass." hoko. "fork." ,, "English." Igirisu. ,, "come here." kame. ,, (Dogs of European race are so styled, because their masters constantly call out "come here!" to them.) kara, from "collar," kasŭteira, from "Castilla."

(Sponge-cake is so called, because introduced by the Spaniards.)

koppu, from the Dutch kop,
"a cup," but used to signify "a glass."

rampu, from "lamp."

ramune, "lemonade."

shabon, "soap," from Spanish jabon.

shatsu, from "shirt."

wanishi, "varnish."

There are also some quite anomalous cases, such as penki, from "paint," where we should naturally have expected peinto.

- V. B. Two or three of the above examples may serve incidentally to show the lingering trace of early intercourse with the Dutch and Spaniards. At the present day, English is drawn on far more extensively than all other foreign tongues together.
- ¶ 35. Finally certain contractions are brought about by euphony and the desire for speedy elocution. Such are ip-pun for ichi fun, "one minute;" fis-sō, for fii sō, "ten vessels." For these the student is referred to the Chapter on Numerals, ¶ 153, as it is in the case of the numerals that these contractions most frequently occur, and that it is most necessary to commit them to memory.

CHAPTER III.

The Noun.

NUMBER AND GENDER.

¶ 36. The noun is indeclinable, distinctions of number and gender being left to be gathered from the context, and case relations being, as in English, indicated by separate words, which are, however, "postpositions," not prepositions. Thus may mean, according to circumstances, to ride on one horse or on several horses, on one mare or on several mares.

Uma ni noru lit. horse in ride

Hĭlo ga kimashĭla lit. person (nominative particle) has-come may mean either that one person has come, or that several people have come. Similarly the word yama may designate one mountain or many mountains, it being properly rather a kind of collective noun, like the German "das Gebirg."

¶ 37. In the extremely rare cases in which it is absolutely indispensable to mention the sex of an animal, this can be done by the use of the prefixes o, "male," and me, "female," the resulting compound being sometimes slightly modified by euphony. Thus:

ushi, "any bovine animal."
o-ushi, "a bull," "an ox."
me-ushi, "a cow."
uma, "any equine animal."

omma, "a horse."

memma, "a mare."

lori, "a bird," "a fowl."

ondori, "a cock."

mendori, "a hen."

The words otoko, "man," and osu, "male;" onna, "woman," and mesu, "female," subserve the same purpose, thus:

ko, "a child;" otoko no ko, "a boy: " onna no ko, "a girl." woman 's child inu, "any canine animal;" $\begin{cases} osu & iiiu, \\ inu & no & osu, \\ mesu & no & inu, \\ inu & no & mesu, \end{cases}$ " a dog; " a bitch."

Such a plirase as

Osu desŭ ka, mesu desŭ ka? { "Is it a male or a Male is? female?"

may mean "Is it a horse or a mare?" "Is it a gander or a goose?" "Is it a he or a she-ass?" etc., etc., according to circumstances. The words osu and mesu are never applied to human beings, whereas the words otoko and onna are applied indifferently to human beings and to other living creatures.

¶ 38. In a very few cases, chiefly the names of the degrees of relationship, the sexes are distinguished by the use of different words, thus:

chichi, "father;" haha, "mother."
olottsan, "papa;" okkāsan, "mamma."
ojiisan, "grandpapa," obāsan, "grandmamma,"
"an old gentleman;" "an old lady."
oji, "uncle;" oba, "aunt."

ani, "elder brother;" ane, "elder sister." otöto, "younger brother;" imöto, "younger sister."

¶ 39. What we call the singular number is occasionally indicated by the use of the word hitotsu or ichi, "one," thus:

hako hitotsu, "one box." ichi-nen, "one year."

¶ 40. The idea of plurality, universality, or variety is occasionally indicated by doubling the word, thus:

 $h\bar{o}-b\bar{o}$, "everywhere;" from $h\bar{o}$, "a side." iro-iro, "all sorts;" from iro, "a sort" (properly "a colour").

kuni-guni, "various countries;" from kuni, "a country." tokoro-dokoro, "many places," "here and there:" from tokoro, "a place."

As exemplified in these words, the second member of such compounds almost always takes the nigori, when it begins with a consonant capable of so doing.

¶ 41. Another method of expressing plurality is by agglutinating certain particles, viz. gata, lachi, shu (often pronounced shi), domo, and ra, to the end of the word, thus:

okŭsama-gata, "ladies;" from okŭsama, "a lady," shikwan-tachi, "officials;", shikwan, "an official."
"my lady."

onna-shu, "women;", onna, "a woman."
onna-domo, "women;", onna, "a woman."
kuruma-ya-ra, "jinrikĭsha-men;" from "kuruma-ya,
"a jinrikĭsha-man."

The order in which the foregoing particles and examples are given is that of a gradually decreasing politeness. There is, indeed, no great difference between gata and tachi, but both are certainly more polite than the three that follow them. Onna-shu may be used in speaking of the female attendants of another; onna-domo is better in speaking of the female attendants in one's own household. The suffix ra is decidedly familiar.

- ¶ 42. Numerous as are the above particles, the idea of plurality is not always very clearly expressed even by their help. Thus, whereas ko may mean "children" as well as "child," the ostensibly plural form ko-domo may mean "child" as well as "children." In this particular instance, but scarcely in any others, we may, in order to get an undoubted plural, superadd one suffix to another, and say ko-domo-ra or ko-domo-shu, "children."
- ¶ 43. We may also (chiefly in vocables borrowed from the Chinese) prefix certain words in order to obtain a sort of plural; thus:
 - ban-koku, "all countries," "international;" from ban, "ten thousand," and koku, "a country."
 - sho-kun, "gentlemen;" from sho, "all," and kun, "prince," "Mr."
 - su-nen, "many years;" from $s\bar{u}$, "number," and nen, "a year."
 - N. B. None of the Chinese words here given—ban, koku, sho, etc.,—can be used alone, but occur only in compounds. Observe the shortening of $s\bar{u}$ to su,—not obligatory, but usual.
- ¶ 44. But though the ways of indicating sex and number are thus various, it cannot be sufficiently borne in mind that they are all more or less exceptional, and are scarcely found except in a limited number of cases which usage has sanctioned. Distinctions of sex and even of number are not dwelt on at every moment by the Japanese, as they are by the European, mind.

COMPOUND NOUNS.

- ¶ 45. Compound nouns are very numerous, and can be formed at will. They generally consist either of two nouns, or of a noun preceded or followed by the stem of an adjective (conf. ¶ 183), or by the "indefinite form" (see ¶ 221 and ¶ 241) of a verb. As the indefinite forms of verbs are themselves constantly used as nouns, two such forms may combine to constitute a compound noun. The following are specimens of the various sorts of compound nouns:
 - furo-ba, "a bath-room," from furo, "a bath," and ba (used only in composition), "a place."
 - le-bukuro, "gloves;" from le, "the hand," and fukuro, "a bag."
 - tetsudō-basha, "a street-car;" from tetsudō, "a railway," and basha, "a carriage."
 - kuro-megane, "black goggles;" from kuroi, "black," and megane, "spectacles." (Megane is itself a compound of me, "eye," and kane, "metal.")
 - tō-megane, "a telescope;" from tōi, "far," and megane, "spectacles."
 - me-kura, "a blind person," lit. "eye-dark;" from me, "the eye," and kurai, "dark."
 - kai-mono, "a purchase," "shopping;" from kau, "to buy," and mono, "a thing."
 - kake-mono, "a hanging scroll," from kakeru, "to hang" (trans.), and mono, "a thing."
 - yake-do, "a burn;" from yakeru, "to burn" (intrans.), and to (for tokoro), "a place."
 - ki-chigai, "a lunatic;" from ki, "spirit," and chigau, "to differ," "to be wrong."

- mono-oki, "an out-house;" from mono, "a thing," and oku, "to put."
- te-nugui, "a towel;" from te, "the hand," and nuguu, "to wipe."
- haki-dame, "a dust heap;" from haku, "to sweep," and tameru, "to collect together" (trans.).
- hiki-dashi, "a drawer;" from hiku, "to pull," and dasu, "to take out."
- make-oshimi, "unwillingness to acknowledge oneself beaten" (e. g. the fox in the fable, who said that "the grapes were sour"); from makeru, "to be defeated," and oshimu, "to regret."
- N. B. Observe the tendency of the second member of the compound to take the migori (Conf. ¶ 28).
- ¶ 46. The forms indicating gender and some of those indicating number are really compounds, as may be seen by reference to ¶ 37 and ¶ 43. So are the augmentatives formed by prefixing \bar{o} , the root of $\bar{o}kii$, "big," and the diminutives formed by prefixing kv, "child" (very rarely v, "small"), thus:

baka, "a fool;" ō-baka, "a great fool." ish, "a stone;" ko-ishi, "a pebble."
nezumi, "a rat;" ō-nezumi, "a large rat;"
ko-nezumi, "a small rat," "a mouse."

 $N.\ B.$ The names of the young of animals are formed by means of ko, either by prefixing it as a particle, or by using it as a separate word, thus:

inu no ko, or ko-inu, { "a puppy."

lit. dog 's child, child-dog } "a puppy." mukade no ko, { "a young centipede."

lit. centipede 's child } "a young centipede."

Usage evinces certain preferences in this matter. Thus, though inu no ko and ko-inu are indifferently employed to signify "puppy," one cannot call the young of the centipede ko-mukade. It is obligatory to say mukade no ko.

¶ 47. In all the examples of compounds hitherto quoted, one of the two members is subordinated to the other. Sometimes, however, the two members of the compound are coordinated, thus:

tsŭki-hi, "months (and) days."

sō-moku, "herbs (and) trees." (This is a Chinese compound, the component parts of which are not used alone.)

But though they are closely joined in pronunciation, there would be no harm in considering these as separate words, and in so writing them, especially if they are native Japanese terms, thus:

ani otōto, "elder brother (and) younger brother," i.e., "brothers."

ane imōto, "elder sister (and) younger sister," i.e., umi kawa, "(the) sea (and the) rivers."

tsŭki hi hoshi, "(the) moon, sun, (and) stars."

Co-ordinated compounds are sometimes obtained by abbreviation, after the manner of the following:

Ei-Bei, "England and America," from Ei-koku, "England," and Bei-koku, "America," by dropping the second half of each.

sak-kon, "yesterday and to-day," from saku-jitsu, "yesterday," and kon-nichi, "to-day."

This occurs only in words taken from the Chinese language, which esteems nothing so much as brevity.

- N. B. The order of such compounds cannot be reversed. B.i-Ei or kon-saku would not be understood.
- ¶ 48. Such co-ordination sometimes assumes a peculiar form, which has been aptly named "the synthesis of contradictories," because from two terms of opposite signification there results a third abstract term giving the mean of the two, thus:

en-kin, "far-near," i.e., "distance."

kan-dan, "cold-heat," i.e., "temperature."

nan-nyo, "man-woman," i.e., "sex."

sei-su, "prosperity-decline," i.e., "the ups and downs,"

"the fortunes," of a family, kingdom, &c.

The above are Chinese vocables. As pure Japanese examples, though not nouns, we may take aru-nashi, "is-isn't," i.e., "(the question of) the existence of a thing."

yoshi-ashi, "good-bad," i.e., "degree of excellence," "quality."

The use of these convenient expressions, which is borrowed from Chinese grammar, is chiefly confined to persons of education.

¶ 49. The student should note the difference in construction between genuine native compounds and those derived from the Chinese, when one member of the compound is a verb governing the other. In genuine Japanese compounds the verb comes last, as in English, thus:

hara-kiri, lit. "belly-cutting," the old form of legalised suicide.

kami-hasami, "hair-cutting." (hasamu="to cut with scissors," whereas kiru is "to cut" in general.)

In Chinese compounds, on the contrary, the verb comes first. Take, for instance, the elegant Chinese synonyms for hara-kiri and kami-hasami, which are preferred by cultured speakers, viz.

sep-puku, from setsu, "to cut," and füku, "belly." zam-patsu, ,, zan, "to cut," ,, hatsu, "hair."

N. B. Hyphens need not be used so freely as we, for etymological purposes, have here done. A hyphen is, however, indispensable between the two members of such compounds as gen-an, "the draft of a document," where a final n is followed by an initial vowel. (Conf. ¶ 23, p. 16, under the heading of N.)

Quite a number of compounds are hybrid, that is, partly native, partly Chinese, as omote-mon, "a front gate; Nihon-bashi, "Japan bridge" (the name of a bridge in Tōkyō), where mon and Nihon are Chinese, the other half of each Japanese.

COMPOSITION A GREAT FACTOR IN WORD-BUILDING.

¶ 50. The student interested in etymology will gradually discover that almost all long Japanese words and many short ones are really compounds, though their composite origin has often been forgotten even by the Japanese themselves. Thus michi, "a road," is from mi, an honorific prefix, and chi, the original word for "road." Mikado, "the Imperial Court," hence "the Emperor," is from the same mi, and kado, "a gate" (compare the "Sublime Porte" of Turkey).* Kagami, "a mirror," is from kage,

^{*} Sir Ernest Satow prefers to derive mikado from the archaic mika, "great," and to (nigori'ed to do), "place."

"shadow," "reflection," and miru, "to see."* Placenames are almost always compounds which can be easily resolved into their constituent elements, as Yoko-hama, "cross strand;" E-do (Yedo), "inlet door;" Ara-kawa, "rough river;" O-shima, "big island; Fuji-san, "Fuji mountain," "Fusiyama" (the etymology of Fuji is obscure, but probably the name is of Aino origin); Miya1-no2-shita,3 "below of Shinto-shrine," i.e. "beneath the shrine;" E^1 - no^2 -shima³, "island³ of inlet"." Similarly in the case of surnames, most of which are of geographical origin, being borrowed from the names of the localities where the persons who first assumed them resided, thus Ko-bayashi, "small forest;" I^1 - nv^2 - uv^3 , "above of the well; Ta^1 - $naka^2$, "among2 (the) rice-fields1;" Fama-da, "mountain rice-field," etc. Men's personal names, answering to our Christian names, are also nearly always compounds. Unfortunately few of these personal names can be translated, founded, as they are, on allusions to texts in the Chinese Classics, to feudal functions now obsolete, to cyclical signs, and to other recondite matters. Such names as Ta-ro, "big male."

^{*} In previous editions the word yane, "roof," was cited in this context as having been derived from ya, the original word for "house" (which we also find in yashiki, "a mansion;" kutsu-ya, "a shoemaker's shop," etc.), and mume, "the breast," hence "the ridge of a roof." This etymology, borrowed from the Japanese grammarians, seems disproved by the form of the parallel term in Luchuan,—yā nu wī, which corresponds, letter for letter, to Japanese ya no ue, lit. "top of house," whence we may suppose yane to have resulted by contraction. This instance may serve to show how uncertain is the basis on which Japanese derivations often rest, in the absence of a tribe of related tongues to serve as a sufficiently broad standard of comparison. Native philologists of the old school—even such great men as Motoori and Hirata—too often permitted themselves to be guided by their "inner consciousness" alone, like our own Western philologists of former centuries.

i.e., "eldest son;" Jirō, "second (lit. next) son;" Saburō (for San-rō), "third son," etc., are sufficiently clear.

N. B. For women's personal names, see ¶ 418.

All Chinese words of more than one character are compounds, e.g. chawan, "a tea-cup," from cha, "tea," and wan, "a bowl;" sendō, "a boatman,"—properly "the master of a junk,"—from sen, "junk," "vessel," and $t\bar{o}$ (nigori'ed to $d\bar{o}$), "head," "chief;" $T\bar{o}ky\bar{o}$ from $t\bar{o}$, "east," and $ky\bar{o}$, "capital city," etc., etc.

¶ 51. As shown in the foregoing examples of michi, "road," and Mikado, "Emperor," honorific prefixes sometimes enter into the actual formation of words. Generally, however, they are felt to be distinct entities, and are therefore written separately, as o cha, lit. "honourable tea," i.e., "tea." go mottomo, lit. "augustly right," i.e., "you are quite right."

o mi ashi. lit. "honourable august feet," i.e.,

"your feet."

For more detailed information concerning the honorifics, which form so important and all-pervading an element of Japanese speech, see Chapter XI.

VARIOUS KINDS OF NOUNS.

¶ 52. Abstract nouns, expressing degree as well as quality, are often derived from adjective stems by agglutinating the syllable sa, thus:

atsusa, "heat," "the degree of heat." omoshirosa, "fun," "interest," "the degree of fun." samusa, "cold," "the degree of cold."

shirosa, "whiteness, "the degree of whiteness."

A tinge or soupeon of a quality, hence sometimes the actual quality itself, and even the object possessing the quality, may be denoted by the termination mi agglutinated to an adjective stem, thus:

"a tinge of red." akami. omoshiromi, "(a certain amount of) fun." "a tinge of white," "the white of an egg." shiromi.

Amami ga usū Sweetness (nom.) thin "It isn't quite sweet enough." gozaimasŭ.

¶ 53. These nouns in sa and mi must be distinguished from the periphrasis formed by means of an adjective or verb and the word kolo, "(an abstract) thing," "a fact," "an act," "a state," as atsui koto, "heat," "the fact of being hot."

kilanai koto, "dirtiness," "the fact that something is dirty."

shiroi koto, "whiteness," "the fact that something is white."

machigatta koto, {"a mistake," "the fact that some thing thing thing one has made a mistake."

shimpo suru koto, { "progress" (the noun); also "to lit. progress makes thing { progress" (the verb).

on wo shiranai kolo, } "ingratitude."

In speaking of the blade of a fine sword, one might say:

Sono kissaki no surudoi koto. Its point 's sharp state, sono yaki no uruwashii koto, its annealing's beautiful state, so fine its edge, that hito-me mite mo sugu samusa the merest glance at it one-eye seeing even, at-onee coldness gives you a shiver." voo obocru kurai da. (accus.) feel amount is.

"So sharp is its point.

These periphrases in koto are often used exclamatorily, thus:

Atsui koto! "Oh! how hot it is!" Kŭsai koto! "Oh! what a horrid smell!"

¶ 54. Parallel to the abstract nouns in koto, are concrete nouns in mono. While koto denotes "a thing of the mind." "a fact," "an act," mono almost always denotes a tangible, material thing or person, thus:

deki-mono, ("a bad place," "an abscess." lit. coming-out thing kŭsai mono, "a smelly thing." shiroi mono, "a white thing." shōjiki-mono, "an honest fellow."

This distinction between koto, "an abstract thing," and mono, "a material thing," must be clearly kept in mind, if the student would avoid constant misapprehension. Thus onaji mono means "the same thing," "the identical article," whereas onaji koto means "the same sort of thing,"—the quality, pattern, etc., being the same, but the actual article a different one. For mono wo at the end of a sentence, see ¶ 287.

Mono no, or to wa in mono no, has a very curious use, whose origin is unknown, but which may most easily be parsed by assuming no to stand for nagara, "while," "whereas:"-

Rikutsu de vea kō iu mono Theory by indeed, thus say thing no, jissai wa yohodo in theory, but it is mighty whereas, practice as-for, very muzukashii. difficult (is).

"That is all very fine hard in practice."

Baka da to wa iu mono Fool is that indeed say thing no, sŭkoshi no yō ni while, little 's business in self useful in minor wa ma ni aimasŭ.
indeed, space to conforms.

"Fool as he is, he is capable of making himself useful in minor matters."

¶ 55. The names of shops are denoted by the termination ya, "house," as:

hon-ya, "a book-store;" from hon, "a book."
niku-ya, "a butcher's shop;" from niku, "flesh."
pan-ya, "a bakery," from pan, "bread."

Kame-ya, lit. "tortoise house" (or, as we might say, "At the Sign of the Tortoise"), the name of a grocery in Tōkyō well-known to foreign residents.

Owing to the general Japanese habit of naming persons after places, such words as the above come to denote, not only the "book-store," the "butcher's shop," and the "bakery," but by extension the "bookseller," the "butcher," and the "baker" themselves. Sometimes indeed the person only, and not the place, is thus designated, as:

kuruma-ya, "a jinrikisha-man" shimbun-ya, "a newspaper man."

¶ 56. Names of trees and plants often terminate in ki, "tree," or in its nigori'ed form gi, thus:

hagi, "the lespedeza."

mugi, "wheat, "barley."

sugi, "the cryptomeria."

susŭki, "the eulalia" (a kind of tall grass).

subaki, "the camelliatree."

yanagi, "the willow-tree."

Names of rivers end in kawa (generally nigori'ed to gawa), "river;" names of stretches of sea in nada; those of islands in shima (often nigori'ed to jima); those of mountains in yama or san (zan), thus:

Okawa, lit. "Great River." Sumida-gawa, "the River Sumida."

Bungo-nada, the stretch of sea near the province of Bungo, separating the islands of Kyūshū and Shĭkoku.

Kojima, lit. "Small Island," a name common to several islands off the Japanese coast.

Ogasawara-jima, Bonin Islands;" named after their discoverer. Ogasawara.

Asama-yama, " Mount Asama."

Bandai-san. " Mount Bandai."

¶ 57. The nouns aida, "interval;" hazu, "necessity;" toki, "time; and tokoro, "place," often assume grammatical functions perplexing to the beginner. Aida comes to correspond to our conjunction "while," hazu to our verbs "ought" or "should," toki to our conjunction "when," thus:

Sō aida. suru do interval. So

{ "While we were do-ing so."

kuru hazu da. Мō Already comes necessity is. by this time."

"He ought to be here

jiki ni kiku` If-there-were, immediately hear hazu da ga,-mada sõ iu kind had happened, necessity is although, still suchkoto rvo kikimasen. fact (accus.) (1)hear not.

"If anything of that should have heard of it.

N. B. Observe the suppressed negative which hazu almost always implies. Observe, too, that hazu is often strengthened by a preceding beki, "should," "ought," thus: Areba, jiki ni kiku-beki hazu da ga, etc. (Conf. ¶ 178 and ¶ 192.)

Nochi ni, yō no nai toki, Ifterwards, business's is-not time, hanashimashō.
(I)will-probably-speak.

"I will tell you about it later, when I am at leisure."

Toki ni at the beginning of a sentence is a sort of expletive corresponding more or less to our "by the way."

¶ 58. More difficult than any of the above are the uses of tokoro, which, from the original concrete sense of "place," has come to be used in various abstract meanings. Sometimes, like koto, it assumes the signification of "a thing of the mind," "a matter," "a subject," "a quality," as in the following example:

Kyūkin no tokoro zva, tsŭki ni Wage 's matter as-for, month in, jū-en tsukazvashimashō. ten-dollars(I)will-probably-gice.

"Coming now to the matter of wages, I may say that I will give you ten dollars a month."

A good instance of tokoro, as equivalent to our suffix "....ness" used to form abstract substantives, occurs at the end of \P 280.

In the middle of a sentence, tokoro, especially when followed by ye, is apt to assume the force of some such conjunction as "while," "whereupon," "when," "just as," thus:

Chōdo deru lokoro ye, kyaku Exactly go-out when. guest ga miela. (nom.) appeared. "A visitor came just as I was on the point of going out."

Tokoro ga implies opposition, thus:

Ima-jibun irasshtla tokoro ga,
Now-time deigned-to-go even-if:
o rusu deshō.
honowrably absent will-probably-be.

Similarly at the beginning of a sentence, tokoro de means "thereupon" or "and so," while tokoro ga means "nevertheless," "still," "all the same," sometimes "it occurs to me that." Another grammatical use of tokoro is that in which it corresponds to some extent to the relative pronouns of European languages, as explained in ¶ 86.

Tokoro is often, in familiar talk, nigori'ed to dokoro, and then expresses an almost scornfully strong degree of affirmation. For instance, a male visitor hazards the remark that his hostess's baby is old enough to creep along the floor. The fond mother, indignant at liaving her offspring's powers rated so low, retoris:

Hau dokoro ja nai; yoku "It is no case of creep place isn't; well creeping, I can assure you. Why! he walks beautifully."

Similarly:

Yomeru dokoro ka ? kōshaku "Able to read, inMole-to-read place ? lecture deed! Why! he delivers lectures."

¶ 59. Many nouns are simply the indefinite forms of verbs used substantively, somewhat like our English nouns in "....ing," such as "the beginning," which is properly a part of the verb "to begin." Here are a few examples: from akinau,

                                     "to trade."
        ''trade:"
akinai.
       "a canal;"
                                     "to excavate."
hori.
                         ,, horu,
       "a mat:"
                         ,, tatamu.
                                     "to pile up."
tatami.
                                     "to take with one."
tsure,
       "companions;"
                         ,, tsureru, warai, "laughter;"
                                     "to laugh."
                        ,, warau,
                        ,, yorokobu, "to rejoice."
vorokobi, "joy;"

NOUNS USED AS ADJECTIVES.

- ¶ 60. The Japanese parts of speech do not exactly coincide with ours (see ¶ 9), and nouns are much more extensively used in this language than in English. We shall see in the next chapter that the so-called pronouns are really nouns. True adjectives also are scarce, and are frequently replaced by nouns, just as in English we say "a gold chain," "a sugar-plum," "the Paris fashions," "a thing of beauty." The chief ways in which a noun may do duty for an adjective are:
- ¶ 61. I. As first member of a compound, thus:

 Amerika-jin, lit. "America person," i.e., "an American."

 doro-ashi, "" mud feet," "" muddy feet."

 Nihon-go, "" Japan words," "" the Japanese language."
- ¶ 62. II. Followed by the postposition no, "of,"—the order of the words, it should be noted, being the reverse of that followed in English, thus:

atari¹ no² keishoku, 8 lit. "scenery" of 2 neighbourhood¹, i.e., "the surrounding scenery."

kinjo no tōbutsu-ya, lit, "Chinese-thing-shop of vicinity," i.e., "a neighbonring general shop."

mukashi no hito, lit. "people of antiquity," i.e., "the ancients."

¶ 63. III. Followed by the word na (see ¶ 197), thus:

baka¹ na² yatsu³, "a foolish¹ (being²) fellow³."

chōhō na kikai, "a convenient machine."

heta na e-kaki, "an unskilful painter."

jōzu na e-kaki, "a skilful painter."

kirei na musume, "a pretty girl."

odayaka na nami, "a calm sea" (lit. "calm waves").

Some of these words—kirei, for instance,—are so constantly used as adjectives, that their proper sense as nouns tends to pass out of remembrance. In the cases where it is preserved, the word takes no after it when it is used as a noun, and na when it is used as an adjective, thus:

heta¹ no² naga²-dangi², "the long⁸ speech⁴ of² an unskilful¹ (speaker)," a proverb signifying that bad speakers are apt to say more than the occasion requires.

heta¹ na² isha² sama⁴, lit. "unskilful¹ being² physician Mr⁴," i.e. "an unskilful doctor." (fōzu 上手 corresponds almost literally to the English "a good hand at," and hetā 下手 to "a bad hand at.")

N. B. Conf. also ¶ 197.

NOUNS USED AS ADVERBS.

¶ 64. When followed by the postposition ni, "in," or de, "by," nouns such as those above instanced often correspond to European adverbs, thus:

baka ni, "foolishly."

gwaikoku ni or de, "abroad." (gwaikoku="outer countries," i.e., "foreign countries.") jozu ni, "skilfully."

Sometimes they are taken adverbially, even though no postposition be suffixed, thus:

konnichi, "this day," or "to-day."
mukashi, "antiquity," ,, "anciently," "formerly."

For nouns used as postpositions, see ¶ 141 et seq.

CHAPTER IV.

The Pronoun.

PERSONAL PRONOUNS.

- ¶ 65. The Japanese words corresponding to the personal pronouns of European languages are simply nouns whose original significations are quite clear, and which are indeed still often used with those significations. Except for the sake of convenience to foreign students, it would not be necessary to discuss them apart from nouns in general. They belong to the category of such descriptive expressions as "your humble servant," "your ladyship," "His Majesty." Self-depreciatory terms are naturally preferred in speaking of oneself (1st. person), and complimentary terms in speaking of other people (2nd. person), also sometimes in speaking of other people (3rd. person).
- ¶ 66. The most usual equivalent for "I" is watakŭshi, lit. "selfishness." The vulgar often contract it to watashi and washi. Other nouns now current in the same sense are boku, "servant," which is much affected by young men in familiarly addressing each other; sessha, "the awkward person;" shōsci, "junior." Ore is a very vulgar corruption of ware, which is the commonest word for "I" in the Written Language. Orā, which may often be heard from the mouths of coolies, stands for ore wa.
- ¶ 67. The following equivalents for "you" are all in common use:—anata, a contraction of ano kata, "that side," beyond" (which meaning is still retained in poetry, as kumo no anata, "beyond the clouds"). Anata is a polite expression; with the addition of sama, "Mr.," "Mrs.," "Miss," "Lord," "Lady," it is supremely polite. Omae, lit. "honourably in front," was formerly polite, but is now only used in addressing inferiors, such as coolies, one's own servants, one's own children, etc. Omae san (san is short for sama) stands half-way between anata and omae in politeness. It is much used by women. Sensei, "senior," is used chiefly in addressing men or women of learning. Danna san, "Mr. Master," is used by a servant in addressing his master, and by inferiors generally. Kimi, "prince," is chiefly used by young men in addressing each other familiarly. Besides the above may be mentioned Heika, lit. "beneath the steps of the throne,"

N. B. Reverence naturally restrains loyal subjects from addressing the throne itself:—they raise their eyes no higher than the ground below the steps leading up to it.

i.e. "Your Majesty;" Kakka "beneath the council-chamber," i.e. "Your Excellency;" sono hō, "that side," the equivalent for "you" employed in the law-courts by legal officers; kĭsama, an insulting term used in addressing an inferior with whom one is angry.

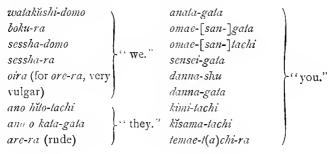

N. B. Etymologically &i-sama means "exalted Sir;" but, like many other words, it has fallen from its former high estate.

The word temae, lit. "before the hand," is remarkable; for it may be used either as a very humble and therefore polite equivalent for "I," or as an insulting equivalent for "you." In the sense of "you," it formerly had the honorific θ prefixed. The rude use of it came in through the dropping of the honorific.

¶ 68. Sensei, Danna san, Heika, and Kakka are as appropriate for the third person ("he" or "she"), when speaking politely, as for the second. Anata may also occasionally be heard in that sense. Much in use also for "he" and "she" are ano hilo, "that person," more politely ano o kata, lit. "that honourable side;" ano otoko, "that man;" ano onna, "that woman;" ano ojiisan, "that old gentleman;" ano obāsan, "that old lady;" etc. Mukō, lit. "the opposite side," i.e., the other party," not infrequently represents "he," "she," or "they." Are, "that," is also sometimes used for "he" or "she," but it is not at all polite, and more often refers to things, i.e., it means "it." The vague English "you" or "one," which corresponds to French "on" and German "man," has no equivalent in Japanese. Thus, "to clap one's hands" is simply to two tataku, lit. "hands (accus.) clap." "You can't tell" (meaning "one has no means of knowing") is simply shiremasen, which might equally well stand for "I can't tell."

- N. B. The word hito has been adduced by some as an equivalent of the French impersonal "on." But it is not really so, as it always retains its proper sense of "person," "people," especially "other people."
- ¶ 69. Like other nouns—indeed more frequently than other nouns—the so-called personal pronouns may take the plural suffixes mentioned on page 29. The following forms are sanctioned by usage:

- N. B. Observe, however, that watakŭshi-domo is often used for the singular, it being slightly humbler than watakŭshi. Oira, too, may be heard in the singular, the line between singular and plural, as already noticed in ¶ 44, being less slarply drawn in Japanese than in European languages. Note, moreover, that the Japanese never use their words for "we," as we sometimes do ours, to signify "you and I." They only use them to signify "other people and I," or rather "I and my fellows." "We," in the sense of "you and I," may be expressed by such a phrase as anata to watakŭshi to; but more often the meaning is approximately rendered in some other idiomatic way by employing an honorific. See, for instance, ¶ 445, No. 115, and ¶ 449, No. 16.
- ¶ 70. Like other nouns, the so-called personal pronouns may be followed by postpositions. Thus, just as we say ano ko no oya, that child of parent,  "the parent of that child,"

```

so also do we say

valakŭshi no oya, \ "the parent of me," of parent, \ i.e., "my parent."

omae no oya, "the parent of you," i.e., "your parent" (in addressing an inferior); ano hito no oya, "the parent of that person," i.e. "his (or her) parent;" etc.

Just as we say

Sono ko wo hidoi me ni Thut child (accus.) harsh eyes to awasemashila, cuused-to-meet.

so also may we say

Watakŭshi wo hidoi me ni awasemashita. "He treated me very badly."

There is, therefore, no such thing as a declension of pronouns or any special set of possessive pronouns.

¶ 71. The chief thing to remember in connection with the Japanese nouns answering to our personal pronouns is the extremely rare use that is made of them. Except in cases of special emphasis or antithesis, the information concerning persons which is in European languages conveyed by means of pronouns, is left to be gathered from the context. Thus the single word kaerimashita will mean "I have come back," or "he, she or they have come back," according to the previous drift of the conversation.

Kore kara furo wo tsŭkaimashō, i.e., "Will now This from, bath (accus.) will-use, take a bath."

naturally means "I will now take my bath;" for it is almost a matter of course that, in such personal things, each individual can speak only for himself. I can only eat my own dinner, probably love only my own country, and work only to support my own wife and children. To be, therefore, for ever reiterating and harping on the words "I," "me," "my," "you," "he," etc., seems to Japanese ears absurd and tedious tautology. A Japanese will often discourse for half-an-hour without using a single personal pronoun. The perpetual recurrence of watakushi and anata is one of the surest signs of a clumsy foreign speaker, who translates his own idiom into Japanese, instead of thinking impersonally as the Japanese do. These remarks will lead the intelligent student to observe that most of the examples scattered throughout the present work are susceptible of being variously rendered. Where, for instance, we have put "I," it would often be equally correct to insert "he." "she," or "they," in its stead. The use of "you," that is of the second person, in English generally necessitates some change in the Japanese phrase, especially if an equal or superior be addressed. This point will be elucidated in the Chapter on Honorifics, ¶ 392 et seq., a chapter which the student would do well to read through in connection with what has here been said on the subject of persona pronouns.

REFLECTIVE PRONOUNS.

¶ 72. The word "self" may be expressed by jibun (less often by jishin), commonly followed by the postposition de, thus:

watakŭshi jibun,
watakŭshi jishin,
omae jibun (not honorific), go jibun (honorific),

"" myself."

N. B. The above occur only when the idea of "self" has to be emphasised. (Conf. \P 71, also \P 324.)

Another word for "self" is onore, which is also used as an insulting equivalent for "you."

Waga, a Classical form whose proper meaning is "my," may still sometimes be heard in the sense of "my own," our own," "one's own," thus:

waga kuni, "my country," "one's country," "la patrie." But its use is chiefly confined to set speeches and lectures. So is that of the phrase waga hai, "we," more lit. "my fellows."

DEMONSTRATIVE, INTERROGATIVE, AND INDEFINITE PRONOUNS AND ADVERBS.

¶ 73. The demonstrative, interrogative, and indefinite pronouns, being marked by certain correspondences of sound and formation, may be best studied by means of the table which we give on the next page. The adverbs derived from the same roots are also given there, so that the learner may embrace all the kindred forms in one glance. He should note that Japanese, like Latin, distinguishes a nearer "that" (sore, Latin "iste") from a further "that"

.V. B. Are and ano are sometimes replaced by their Classical equivalents hare and hano.

(are, Latin "ille"), the former being used of things not very distant and of things connected with the person spoken to, while the latter is applied to things which are distant or have relation to the person spoken of. He must note furthermore that Japanese, like French, distinguishes substantive forms of these pronouns from adjective forms, e.g. kore, "celui-ci," but kono, "ce."

¶ 75. Here are a few examples of the use of the substantive forms kore, "this;" sore, "that" (near); are, "that" (far); dove? "which?" dare? or more politely donata? "who?"; nani? "what?"—

Kore wa omoshiroi. { i.e., "As for this, it is amusing," This as-for, amusing. { or more briefly, "This is fun."

Sore wa, nan desŭ ? \ "What is that (which you have in That as-for, what is it? \ your hand, etc.)?"

Are wa, dare no uchi desŭ ? ("Whose is that house That as-for, who of house is(it)? (over there)?"

Dore ni shimashō? \ "Which shall I take?" Which to shall-do?

Nani voo suru? \ "What are you doing?"
What (accus.) do? \ (Said to an inferior. The polite equivalent would be Nani nasaru?)

Dare ga kimashita? { "Who has come?" (Donata ga mairaremashita? would be more polite.)

¶ 76. Here are some examples of the adjective forms kono, "this;" sono, "that" (near); ano, "that" (far); dono? "which?" and of the forms in na and iu:—

Kono nedan.
Konna nedan.
Sono mama.
Sonna koto.
Sō iu koto.
Ano takai yama.

"This price."

"This sort of price."

"That way;" "as it is."

"That sort of thing."

("That high mountain (over there)."

Anna tohōmonai kake-ne. \ "Such an extravagant price That-like outrageous overcharge. \ as that."

(Said in speaking to a third party. In addressing the shopkeeper who was guilty of the overcharge, one would say sonna, not anna, because sonna corresponds to the second person, anna to the third.)

Dono Isumori de ? \ "With what intention?"

 $D\bar{v}$ in Isumori de P \ "With what kind of intention?" How say intention by?

¶ 77. What we have here, for convenience' sake, termed adjective forms, are not adjectives properly so called. Kono was originally two words, viz. ko, "this" (substantive), and no, "of," so that kono meant "of this." Similarly in the case of sono, ano, and dono ?, which meant respectively "of that" (nearer) or "of him," "of that" (further) or "of. him," and "of which?" They still preserve this their ancient sense in certain contexts, as:

sono tame, "(for the) sake of that." sono oya, "his (or her) parent."

Similarly, kono nedan, translated above by "this price," may also mean on an occasion "the price of this."

Konna, "such," is a contraction of kono $y\bar{v}$ na, lit. "this manner being," i.e., "being in this way," "being thus." Similarly sonna is from sono $y\bar{v}$ na, anna from ano $y\bar{v}$ na, and donna P from dono $y\bar{v}$ na P K \bar{v} iu, "such," means literally "thus (they) say," i.e. "people call it thus." $S\bar{v}$ iu, \bar{u} iu, and $d\bar{v}$ iu P have a similar etymology.

¶ 78. Before words of Chinese origin, the adjective pronouns "this" and "that" are often expressed by the syllable $t\bar{o}$ (\ddot{a}), a Chinese vocable properly signifying "the one in question," "the actual one," as:

tō-nin, "the person in question," "this (or that) person."

tō-gelsu no sue, \ " the end of the month."

Some of the adverbs given in the paradigm on page 52 will be found exemplified in Chapter X, ¶ 368.

¶ 79. The indefinite pronouns are formed from the interrogative pronouns by the addition of the interrogative particle ka, of the postpositions mo and de mo, "even," and of the emphatic particle zo. Thus dare¹ de² mo³, "any body," "every body," is literally "even³ by² whom?¹" Here are a few examples of the use of the indefinite pronouns:

Omocha ya nani ka. "Toys or something."

(The words nani ka here have the same vague meaningless application that "or something" often has in Colloquial English.)

Mata donata ka miemashita. (Polite.)

RELATIVE PRONOUNS.

¶ 80. The Japanese language has neither relative pronouns nor relative words of any sort. Their absence is generally made good by the use of a construction in which the verb is prefixed to the noun attributively, just as an adjective might be. Thus the Japanese not only say "a good man," "a bad man," etc.; but they say "a comes man," "a goes man," "the went man," instead of "a man who comes," "a man who goes," "the man who went." This is illustrated in the following examples:—

Kuru htto. | "The person who comes."

Comes person. | "The people who come." |

Kila htto. | "The person who came." |

Came person. | "The people who came." |

Kino kita hito. When the person (or persons) who came Vesterday came person. Systerday."

Ano yama no zetchō matsu.

pine.

The large pine-tree which grows on the top of that mountain over there."

Shinakucha naran As-for-not-doing, ts-not koto desŭ. (Conf. § 348) thing (it)is. ¶ 81. As shown in the foregoing examples, the English relative and verb are represented in Japanese by a verb alone which is used participially, or, as it is more usual to say in Japanese grammar, attributively, prefixed to the noun. In English this construction is allowable only in the case of participles, as "the shipwrecked sailors," "the shrieking women and children." In Japanese it is the actual tenseforms of the verb that are thus employed. speaking, all the tenses of the indicative mood are capable of being thus used attributively in relative constructions. In the Book Language they are all constantly so used. But the Colloquial exhibits a strong tendency to limit this way of speaking to the "certain past" and the "certain present or future," the merely "probable" tenses (e.g. koyō, kitarō) being rarely if ever now heard in such contexts, save in a few special idioms, such as:

Narō koto nara. Will-probably-be fact if(-it)-is. \ '' If possible." (Conf. \P 348.)

Arö hazu wa nai. ("There ought (There-)will-probably-be necessity as-for, is-not.) not to be."

Observe that as the Japanese language, generally speaking, abliors the use of the passive, the verbs employed in relative sentences are almost always neuter or active ones, thus:

Nansen ni aimashila suifu-ra. \ "The shipwrecked sailors."

Haruka oki ni mieru fune. \ "The vessel that is to Afar, offing in, appears vessel. \ be seen far away at sea."

Hepburn sensei no koshiraeta ("The dictionary which was written by Dr. Hepburn," i.e., "Dr. dictionary.

Otokichi to iu annai no mono.

Lit. "the guide (annai no mono, i.e. person of guidance), of whom people say (iu) that (to) he is Otokichi."

"The guide called Otokichi," or "Otokichi the guide."

Arashi to iu mono.

Lit. "the thing (mono) of which people say (iu) that (to) it is a typhoon (arashi.)"

"What is called a typhoon," typhoon (arashi.)"

Amerika to in kuni. { "The country people call America," i.e. simply, "America."

- N. B. This impersonal but active construction with to in and other synonymous verbs, corresponding to the English passive, must be thoroughly mastered, as it is constantly in the mouths of the people. It is often used for making general assertions, such as
- "Dogs are faithful creatures," or Inu to iu mono wa, chūgi no aru
 "The dog is a faithful creature." mono desŭ.
- Lit. As-for (wa) the thing (mono) of which people say (in) that (to) it is a dog (inn), it is (desŭ) a thing (mono) which is (arn) of (no) faithfulness (chūgi). Here our single word "dog" or "dogs" is rendered by the five words inu to in mono wa.
- ¶ 82. This use of the active where a European would expect the passive sometimes causes an appearance of ambiguity. Thus shiranai hito may signify either "a person who does not know" or "a person who is not known (to me)," i.e. "a person whom I do not know." But as a rule the context sufficiently indicates which way the phrase should be taken. For instance, yonde¹ shimatla² hon³ cannot possibly mean "the book which has finished reading," as such a collocation of words would have no sense. It can only mean "the book³ which (I, they, etc.) have finished² reading¹." Sumau² lochi¹ cannot mean "the locality² which resides¹." It must mean "the locality² in which (so-and-so) resides¹." The following are similar instances:

"The time when (I, they, Tochaku shita toki. did time. etc.) arrived."

("Something which I don't Wakaranai koto. understand." Understand-not thing.

Te ni motteru mono. ("That which he is holding Hand in is-holding thing. in his hand.

¶ 83. The example just given of sumau tochi, signifying "the locality in which so and so resides," exemplifies a remarkable Japanese idiom according to which the preposition that frequently accompanies an English relative pronoun is always omitted, thus:

Toji no furuku natta hon. ("A book of which the binding has become book. old."

Sore¹ wa,² anata³ ga⁴ saku-nen⁵ o³ in which you8 staid⁵,¹,8 (lit. honourably o, deigned nastta yadoya⁰ desŭ¹o ka¹¹ ? last year⁵?"

"Is10 that1 the hotel?

Ie: watakushi wa tomarimasen me as-for stay-not ga—, saku-nen tomodachi ga there; but (ga) it is the whereas— last-year friend (nom.) hotel in which a friend tomarimashite, taisō ni greatty having-staid, irimashita yadoya desu. entered hotel

"No, I did not stay ki ni of mine staid last year, spirit to and with which he was much pleased."

Dono yama kara kono Which mountain from, neighbourhood 's fumous-production the crystals, for which no suishō wa demasŭ ka? 's crustals as-for, issue these mountains come this locality is noted?"

Walakushi ga Yokohama no I (nom.) Yokohama 's ni-jū ban ye lanomimashilara, twenty number to when-had-applied, achira kara uke-atle there from guaranteeing yokoshimashila boy desu.

"He is a servant whom I got by applying to the Grand Hotel at Yokohama, and for whose good behaviour the hotel-keeper is guarantee."

N. B. The English word "boy" has been largely adopted by the Europeanised Japanese in the sense of "servant." We have even heard onna no boy (!) used to signify a "maid-servant."

Closely similar are such cases as warui rikutsu, signifying not "a bad reason," but "the reason why (so-and-so) is bad."

- ¶ 84. The terseness of the Japanese expression as compared with ours should not occasion any insuperable difficulty to the careful student. After all, we use a somewhat similar idiom in English when we speak of "a shaving-brush," meaning "a brush with which a man helps himself to shave;" of "a smoking-room," meaning "a room in which people smoke;" of "a stepping-stone," meaning "a stone on which one may step," &c., &c.
- ¶ 85. Several "who's" or "which's" are often attached in English to the same noun. In such cases the Japanese language uses the gerund (in set speeches the indefinite form) for the verbs of every clause, excepting that immediately preceding the noun qualified (see ¶ 278 et seq. and ¶ 422 et seq.). An instance of this construction is given in the example on the foregoing page, where tomarimashite is a gerund and irimashita a past tense, both qualifying the word yadoya. But this idiom—the referring of several relative clauses to a single noun—is not a favourite one in Colloquial Japanese. The example at the top of this page shows, in the case of the word tanomimashitara, the avoidance of such a construction. Indeed a great number of relative phrases—even single phrases—are turned in some other way. For instance:

Mune¹ no² waruku⁸ naru⁴ hanashi⁵, "A story which it makes one feel sick to listen to;" lit. "chest¹ 's² bad² becoming⁴ story⁵."

Musume¹ ga² hitori⁸ atte⁴, O Haru⁵ to⁸ möshimasü⁷, "He has one daughter whose name is O Haru," lit. "Daughter¹ one-person³ being, ⁴ (people) say⁷ that⁶ (she is) O Haru⁵."

Kesa¹ no² yōsu⁸ de⁴ wa⁵, furu⁸ ka⁷ to⁸ omottara⁹, sukkari¹⁰ haremashĭta¹¹, i.e. "The weather, which looked like rain this morning, has cleared up beautifully;" more lit. "By appearance of this-morning, when-(I) had-thought that "Will-(it) rain ?^{8,7}," quite¹⁰ (it) has-cleared¹¹."

¶ 86. The words tokoro no, lit. "of place," are sometimes used by the educated classes in relative phrases as a sort of substitute for the relative pronouns "who," "which," and "that." But these words really add nothing to the sense, and only encumber the construction. They owe their origin to the slavish imitation of a Chinese idiom. Thus:

Kuru tokoro no hito, for Kuru hito.
Kinō kita tokoro no hito, ,, Kino kita hito.
Shinakucha naran tokoro ,, Shinakucha naran no koto desu, koto desu.

N. B. The student is recommended to compare the Japanese and English texts of any of the longer pieces given in Part II of this work. Such comparison, carefully carried out, will teach him better than anything else the manner in which Japanese thought moves under circumstances which, in our European idiom, demand the employment of relative pronouns or other relative words. The subject is important enough to reward any amount of trouble taken on its behalf.

CHAPTER V.

The Postposition.

THE POSTPOSITION PROPER.

¶ 87. Japanese postpositions correspond for the most part to English prepositions, serving like them to indicate those relations of words which Latin, German, and other Aryan languages of the older type denote by the use of case-inflections.

There are two kinds of postpositions, viz. postpositions proper and quasi-postpositions (¶ 141 et seq.).

The postpositions proper, with their most usual significations, are as follows:

DE.

¶ 88. De has two widely different uses. One is to render the sense of "by," whence also "with," "by means of," less often "in." This its first acceptation offers no difficulty. In its second acceptation, de seems at first sight to mean nothing at all, and thus puzzles the foreign student who is desirous of accounting for its presence in the sentence. De is here etymologically a corruption of nite, itself the gerund of an obsolete substantive verb. Its proper sense is therefore "being." But in most contexts this de has sunk so completely to the level of a mere grammatical particle as not to need translating into English. It is a moot point whether what was originally one word has branched out into these two significations, or whether two words originally distinct have coalesced into a single particle. Here are a few examples of de meaning "by," "with,"

Nawa¹ de² shibaru³. "To tie³ by means of ² a rope¹."

Hasami¹ de² kiru³. "To cut³ with² scissors¹."

Inu wo kŭsari de Dog (accus.), chain by, "Chain up the dog!" (Said to a coolie.) fastening put!

Kore de gaman nasai/ { "Please be contented with This with, patience deign! } this,"

Kono kawa de, ai ga
This river in, trout(nom).

"Are there any trout to be tsuremasŭ ka?

caught in this stream?"

Kono mono wa,
This thing as-for,
Nihon-go de nan to Japan-language by, what that moshimasi ka?

say

"What is this called in Japanese?"
(More lit. "As for this thing, in Japanese, what do people say that it is?")

It will be gathered from these examples that de has its first signification ("by," "with," "in") chiefly when construed with transitive verbs.

De has its second signification, i.e., it properly means "being," in such cases as the following:—

Ima no kuruma-ya wa,
Now 's jinrikisha-man as-for, dajaku de yaku ni indolent."

indolent being, usefulness to (More lit. "The present jinrikisha-mani. stands-not.

"My present jinrikisha-man is no good,—he is so indolent."

(More lit. "The present jinrikisha-man, being indolent, is of no use.")

Yoppodo beppin de very cxtru-quality being pretty girl."

aru. (Said, e.g., of a singing-girl.)

(More lit. "She is being a very extra quality.")

San-ji han de gozaimasŭ. { "It is (being) half-Three-hours half being is. } past three."

The first of these phrases illustrates a construction with what are called "quasi-adjectives," which will be touched on again in $\Pi$ 200, and exemplified in $\Pi$ 201 (examples 9 and 10). The second and third phrases are much more important, showing, as they do, the most usual manner of expressing our verb "to be," viz, by means of de aru, de arimasŭ, de gozaimasŭ (see also $\Pi$ 341 et seq.). De aru is commonly contracted to da, de gozaimasŭ to desŭ, less often and somewhat vulgarly to de gozaimasŭ, de gesŭ, or de gasŭ; similarly in the other tenses, for instance datta for de atta, deshita for de gozaimashita, and so on (see also $\Pi$ 233, 270, 343, and 344). The foregoing examples would therefore generally become Yoppodo beppin da, San-ji han desŭ. The following is a very common phrase illustrating this idiom:

¶ 89. It happens not infrequently that de, in both its acceptations, is strengthened by means of the postposition wa, especially in phrases expressing interrogation, negation, or something disagreeable. De wa, in familiar talk, is apt to be contracted into ja. Thus:

Yoppodo beppin de 'Isn't she very pretty?"

Very extra-quality being (Or, Yoppodo beppin ja nai is-not?')

Kore de wa, ōki ni This by indred greatly komarimasŭ. (Or, Kore ja ōki ni komarimasŭ.) ¶ 90. When the substantive verb has a qualifying word or phrase along with it after de, the noun followed by de often corresponds to an English nominative,—not that de has any nominative force properly so called, but because the word which we treat as a nominative is conceived of by the Japanese as the means whereby, or the place in which, the action or state denoted by the verb occurs, for instance, Mizu de takŭsan.

Cold-water by, (it will be)plenty. trouble to bring hot water as well.")

"Cold water will do perfectly well." (i.e., "You need not trouble to bring hot water as well.")

 $N.\ B.$ The Japanese sentence should, properly speaking, have desi, "it is," stuck on to the end of it; but, as will be further illustrated in ¶ 429, the final verb is often omitted when no ambiguity is likely to ensue.

 $\begin{array}{ccc} & \textit{Hitolsu de yoroshii.} \\ & \textbf{One by is-good.} \\ \text{(More politely, } \textit{Hitotsu de yoroshi\bar{u} gozaimasŭ.)} \end{array} \right\} \begin{array}{c} \text{``One will be} \\ \text{enough.''} \end{array}$ purchase to has-become.

"The Government has bought it," or "It has been purchased by the Government."

GA.

¶ 91. The original sense of ga is "of," now only preserved in certain names of places and in a few locutions, such as Hoshi-ga-oka, "The Mound of the Stars" (the name of a part of Kamakura);ga sŭki, "fond of," "liking;"..... ga kirai, "not fond of," "disliking;"......ga hoshii, "desirous of."

Watakŭshi wa, tabako ga Me as-for, tobacco of, dai-sŭki (desŭ). great-fond (am).

Sake ga kirai desŭ. { "I am not fond of sake of hating um. { sake."

Mizu ga hoshiū gozaimasŭ. \ \ ''I want some water.''

¶ 92. Ga is used as a sign of the nominative case, as: \ Kane ga nai. ("There is no money;"

Money (nom.) isn't. (hence "I have no money."

Ame ga fulle kimashila. \\Rain (nom.) fulling has-come. \\\ ''It has come on to rain."

Kono kuruma ga, furukŭte will-probably-be-good.

"You had better consult the doctor about it."
(More lit. "It may be well to get (it) seen by the doctor.")

Sensei ga miemashita. { "The teacher has appeared," i.e., has come.

Observe that the nominative use has developed out of the genitive. For instance, the etymological signification of Kane ga nai is "The not-being of money;" that of Sensei ga miemashita is "The having-appeared of the teacher." Originally none of these sentences with ga were predicative. Modern usage alone has made them so, just as—to borrow an apt illustration from Mr. Aston—the incomplete sentences of an English telegram or advertisement convey a predicative sense to the mind of the reader. Observe too, from the example Isha m mite morau ga yokarō, that postpositions may be suffixed to verbs as readily as to substantives, and that verbs, and indeed whole phrases, may form the subject or object of other verbs.

- ¶ 93. When found at the end of a clause, ga has an adversative force, of which "whereas" is the most literal English equivalent, but which is generally best rendered in practice by prefixing "yet" or "but" to the following clause. Sometimes the adversative force is softened down to a mere intimation of discontinuity between two successive states or actions, and then ga must be translated by "and so" or "and."
 - N. B. The final u of $mas \tilde{u}$ revives pretty distinctly before ga, for which reason we write mas u in all such examples.

ga yō gozaimasŭ. (nom.) good are. weather."

¶ 94. Sometimes ga with adversative force is repeated in two consecutive clauses, after the manner of "either....or:"

Bankoku-kōhō ga"We may have inter-International-law (nom.) may-exist national law, and we may ga nani have all sorts of fine either, something (nom.) may-exist ga,-mada mada dori bakarı things; but we are still very far from having stillrightonly or, still larrived at a social state katsu koto action (nom.) in which right conquer triumphs." dekimasen. forthcomes-not.

Sometimes ga occurs elliptically at the end of an unfinished sentence. See, for examples, those given about the middle of \ 287.

KA.

¶ 95. Ka serves to ask a question, as:

Arimasu.

"There is."

Arimasŭ ka ?

" Is there?"

Furo' zwr² dekimashĭta³. {"The bath is ready." (More lit. "As-sor² the bath,¹ it-has-forthcome,³")

Furo wa dekimashita ka? " Is the bath ready?"

If the sentence already contains some other interrogative word—an interrogative pronoun or adverb,—ka is often omitted, and it is generally best to omit it, thus:

Nan-doki ni mairimashō ka ? What-hour at shall-come or Nan-doki ni mairimashō ?

"At what o'clock shall

Itsu shinimashita (ka) ? When

"When did he die?"

 $egin{array}{lll} oldsymbol{Dar{o}} & iu & vake & de & konna \\ oldsymbol{Whid-sort-of} & reason & by, & such \\ baka & na & koto & voo & suru & ? \\ \hline & footish & things (accus.) & do & ? \\ \end{array} ightharpoonup ^{C_1} Why do you do such silly things as this ?" (Said to an inferior.)$

¶ 96. Sometimes ka expresses a merely rhetorical or ironical question, sometimes nothing beyond a mere shade of doubt. In the latter case it corresponds to such English words as "may," "might," "perhaps:"

Mata yuki ga furimashō .1yain suow (nom.) will-probably-fall ("I think it will to omoimasŭ, that think.

Mala yuki ga furimashō "I am inclined to Igain snow (nom.) will-probably-fall think that it may ka to omowaremasŭ. snow again."

Suzuki to ka iu hito. { "A man called, if I suzuki that "(they) call person. { mistake not, Suzuki."

¶ 97. Ka......ka means "or," "either.....or," "whether.....or:"

Ii ka warui ka, shirimasen. \ "I can't tell whether Good? bad." it is good or bad."

Muku desŭ ka, mekki desŭ ka? { "Is it all gold or only unalloyed is? plated is? { gilt?" (Or, "Is it all silver or only plated?") thinking am.

¶ 98. Ka helps to form certain indefinite pronouns and adverbs, such as "somebody," "something," "somewhere". See the paradigm on page 52.

KARA.

¶ 99. Kara means "from," "since," "because," "after:"

Koko kara lõge made wa, e' How far may it be Here from, puss to indeed, from here to the top of the pass?"

titt what amount probably-is?

Ni-san-nen-zen kara hito

Kitabiremashita kara, chotto

Have-got-tired because, a-tittle yasumimasho.

will-mobably-vest.

Kitabiremashita kara, chotto

u' I am tired; (so) let us rest a minute."

- N. B. Some speakers say kara shite (shite is the gerund of suru, "to do") for kara; others say kara ni. The phrase mono desŭ kara or mon' desŭ kara, lit. "because (it) is thing," is another favourite circum-locution having the meaning of "because." The noun yue, lit. "cause," or yue ni, almost lit, "because," is also in use, though perhaps sounding just a trifle old-fashioned and stiff.
- ¶ 100. Kara has the sense of "after" only when suffixed to the gerund in le, and in a few special locutions, as:

itte kara, "after going," "after having gone."

mimashite kara, "after seeing," "after having seen."

kore kara, "after this," "henceforward."

sore kara, "after that," "and then," "next."

- N. B. The past itta kara means "because he has gone;" mimashita kara means "because I have seen." Be very careful not to confuse these two locutions, which differ only by the use of the gerund in e when "after" is meant, and of the past tense in a when "because" is meant.
- N. B. The Japanese often use "from" (kara, sometimes yori), when "at" would come more naturally to English lips, as:

Myönichi no enzetsu wa, nan-ji To-morrow's lecture as-for, what-hour kara hajimarimasü?—Gogo ni-ji from begins? Noon-after two-hours to-morrow? — At two kara desü.
from (it) is.

The idea is that the lecture, beginning as it does at two o'clock, will last from two to some other hour not named.—Observe how the Japanese idiom retains the verb "it is" (desŭ) at the end of the sentence, while English dispenses with it. A similar instance of this occurs in the second example given just below under made.

MADE.

¶ 101. Made means "till," "as far as," "down to," "to:"

Kore made. "Thus far," "hitherto," "till now."

Telsudo voa, doko made dekite "How far is the Railway us-for, where to done orimasŭ — Mitajiri made desŭ. As far as Mitajiri."

Watakŭshi no kuru made, matte

(More lit. "till my

Doko¹ made² mo⁸.

{ "Ever so far," "for any distance." (Lit. even³ till² where.")

N. B. For made ni in the sense "by," see N. B. at end of ¶ 136.

MO*

¶ 102. Mo means "even," "also," "and," "too." When repeated, mo.....mo means "both.....and:"—

Itsu made mo.

{ lit. "Even till when," i.e., "forever."

Watahushi mo mairimasu.

"I will go too."

ıkemasen. is-no-go.

Kore mo wasurecha "And you mustn't forget this also. as-for-forgetting, this either;" or "Nor must you forget this."

Ka mo nomi mo "It is a place where there are plenty both of mosquitoes and of fleas." numerous place is.

(This is a very common idiom.)

Nai kolo mo gozaimasen. {
 "It cannot be said that there are none," or simply "There are certainly some."

Construed with a negative verb, mo.....mo "neither.....nor," thus:

Yoku mo waruku mo nai. \ "It is neither good nor Good also, bad also is-not. \ bad."

Mo is sometimes placed after ka, when the latter means "perhaps" (see ¶ 96). It retains in Japanese something of its proper force of "even," but can hardly be represented in the English translation, thus:

Mala rai-nen kuru ka Again coming-yeur come ? (Perhaps I may come mo shiremasen. even cannot-know.

N. B. For mo serving to form expressions analogous to the concessive mood, see ¶ 289.

^{*} Not to be confounded with the adverb $m\bar{o}$, for which see ¶ 373.

MOTTE.

¶ 103. Motte, properly the gerund of the verb motsu, "to hold," is in Written Japanese the usual word for "by," "thereby." In the Colloquial it survives only as a sort of emphatic particle, which is moreover little used except by old-fashioned speakers. Thus hanahada motte is the same as hanahada, "very," but emphasised; ima motte may be rendered by "even now," or by the help of some such word as "very," thus:

Mukashi kara imamotte, "It is a shop which has Ancient-time from, now indeed, voku carried on a good trade ai-karnarazu well from old times down to mutually-changing-not this very day." urerumisedesŭ. sells (intrans.) shop

N. B. Ai, the equivalent of our word "mutually," is often thus prefixed to verbs by pedantic speakers. It is a relic of the Book Language, and has little or no meaning now. This sentence is a good example of the apparent ambiguity of relative constructions in Japanese, which was pointed out in ¶ 82. The speaker of course means to say that the things in the shop sell well; but he seems to say that it is the shop itself which sells well.

When de is used in the sense of "by" or "with," motte is often suffixed to it by all classes of speakers, thus:

 $H\bar{o}ch\bar{o}$ de (motte) kiru. Knije by to-cut. 'To cut with a knife.'

Nawa de (nolle) shibaru. Continua rope."

Kaze de (motte) to ga Wind by, door (nom.) aotte imasŭ. stamming is.

"The door keeps slamming on account of the wind."

For NA and NAN, see ¶ 197.

NI.

 \P 104. The original sense of m is "in," "into," "to":

Kono hen ni kiji "Are there no This neighbourhood in, pheasants pheasants in this wa imasen ka? " neighbourhood?"

N. B. Compare this example with the fifth on p. 63, and note that de serves to indicate the place where something is done, ni the place where something merely is.

Kono kamo wo ryōri-nin
This wild-duck (accus.), cookery-person ni walashite kudasai.
to, handing condescend.

"Please hand this wild-duck to the cook."

Hajimele o me have had the honour to meet you."

(A phrase which it is considered polite to use when introduced to a new acquaintance.)

¶ 105. Ni has many other idiomatic uses, of which the following are the chief, viz.

With a passive verb, ni corresponds to "by," thus:

Osoroshiku domo ka "Oh! I have been Frightfully really, mosquitoes frightfully stung by the mosquitoes."

A kindred idiom is found in the mi corresponding to our "by" or "with," in such phrases as:

Me ni miru mono, mimi Eyes by, see things; cars ni kiku mono.
by, hear things.

¶ 106. With a causative verb, ni denotes the person who is caused to perform the action, thus:

NÌ.

Boy ni sagasasemashō. { "I will make the boy look for it."

¶ 107. Suffixed to the indefinite form of a verb, ni means "(in order) to," thus:

Ueno no sakura wo "I want to go to see to reunt-to-go."

Ueno 's cherry-blossoms (accus.) the cherry-blossoms at Ueno."

 $N.\ B.$ It is only with the indefinite form of the verb that ni has this meaning. When, as often happens, it follows the present tense used as an infinitive, it preserves its original force, thus:

Michi ga warukitte, aruku ni "The roads are so Roads (nom.) beiny-bad, wedk in, hone ga oremasŭ. bones (nom.) break (intrans).

Mada neru ni wa hayai. Wit is still too early to still to-sleep to as-for (it is) early. go to hed."

¶ 108. Ni suffixed to nouns serves to form expressions corresponding to European adverbs, as:

daiji, "importance," "care;" daiji ni, "carefully."

heta, "a bad hand (at);" heta ni, "unskilfully."

ima, "the present moment," ima ni, "presently."
"now:"

jōzu, "a good hand (at);" jōzu ni, "skilfully." rippa, "splendour;" rippa ni, "splendidly." (See also ¶ 64.)

¶ 109. When several things are enumerated, mi often means "besides the foregoing," "and:"

Biir u^1 ni^2 , $bud\bar{o}$ -s hu^8 ni^4 , $tepp\bar{o}$ -miz u^5 wo^8 motte iki-depoint iki-de

Hana¹ wa^{8} sakura⁸ ni^{4} , { "The cherry is the king of flowers, and the warrior the king of men."

Lit. As-for² flowers¹, (the best is) the cherry-blossom²; and-to-the-foregoing-it-may-be-added-that⁴, as-for⁶ human-beings⁵, (the best are) warriors⁷.

NO.

 \P 110. No means "of," or denotes the possessive case :

 $Neko^1$ no^2 $tsume^3$.

" A cat'1s2 claws3."

the indefinite form of the verb aru, "to be.") Ari is \((Lil. "Way of being," vi.e., "Just as it is." \)

Kalla bakari no shina.

Bought only 's article.

Something I have only just bought." (More lit. "An article of quite recent buying.")

We have already noticed, when treating of the postposition ga, the genitive origin of many apparently nominative expressions in Japanese. The same tendency is exemplified by no, though less frequently in the Colloquial than in the Written Language, thus:

Kisha no tsūkō suru toki, senro ("It is dangerous to train 's passage does time, line when the train is passing." (accus.) as-for-crossing, (is) dangerous. (More lil. "at the time of the passing of the gozaimasŭ.)

¶ 111. No is used in attributive phrases either in lieu of, or suffixed to, the other postpostions, it being a rule that none of the postpositions excepting no can connect two nouns in such phrases. An example or two will make this clearer:

- (1) Kono ura ni ike ga gozaimasŭ. { "There is a pond This back in, pond (nom.) is. { at the back of this."
- (2) Kono ura no ike wa, asō { "The pond at the back gozaimasŭ. } of this is shallow."
- (3) Kuni kara dempō ga kimashĭta. ('I have received a telegram from, telegram (nom.) has-eome. (from home."
- (4) Kuni kara no dempō. "A telegram from home."

In the above predicative phrases (the first and the third), each English preposition is rendered by the Japanese post-position properly corresponding to it. But turn the phrase attributively (the second and fourth), and no either supplants, or is suffixed to, that postposition (no for ni in the second, kara no for kara in the fourth).

In this manner no, "of," comes to express almost every idea of relation; or rather all the various ideas of relation come to be summed up by the Japanese mind under the one idea of "of;" thus:

Atami no onsen.

Fuji no yuki.

"The hot springs at Atami."

"The snow on Fuji."

"A leading article in the "Daily News."

Oya no mo.

Waboku no dampan.

Korera-byō no yobō.

"The mourning for a parent."

"Deliberations about peace."

"Precautions against cholera."

Even the idea of apposition finds its place under this heading, for instance:

Kerai no Tosŭke. "His retainer Tosŭke."

Indeed apposition is often expressed in English itself by a similar idiom with "of," as when we say

"The province of Yamato," Yamato no kuni,

¶ 112. No is used substantively with the meaning of the English word "one" or "ones" (see also ¶ 137), thus:

Warui no. "A bad one." Jobu na no. "A solid one."

N. B. For the na of jobu na, see ¶ 197.

Kore wa ii no da.

This as-for, good one is. $\begin{cases} \text{"This is a good} \\ \text{one."} \end{cases}$

Iku tabi mo mita no desŭ. ("It is a thing I have seen any number of times."

Under this heading, note the following specimens of a curious idiom:

Inshi¹ no² furui³ no⁴, as lit. as possible, "old² ones⁴ of ² stamps¹," i.e. "stamps that are old," hence "some old stamps."

Kwashi¹ no² shinki³ ni⁴ yaila⁵ no⁵, as lit. as possible, "in⁴ newness³ have-burnt⁵ one⁵ of² cake¹, i.e., "a cake that has been freshly baked," or more simply, "a freshly baked cake."

There is just the shadow of a shade of difference in intention between these circumlocutions and the simpler expressions

Furui inshi. "Old stamps."

Shinki ni yaita kwashi. "A freshly baked cake."

The circumlocutory form with the two no's seems to contain a tacit reference to stamps that are not old and cakes that are not freshly baked,—a sort of emphatic dwelling on the ideas of oldness and of freshness respectively.

¶ 113. No often serves to form expressions corresponding to English adjectives, as Nihon no, "of Japan," i.e., "Japanese" (see ¶ 62, and ¶ 197 et seq.). Sometimes, in quite familiar talk, it occurs as a final particle with a certain emphatic force, corresponding to that of the Colloquial English phrase "and so there!" or "and what do you think of that!" A good example of this occurs towards the end of this Handbook, in Chap. II of the "Botan-dōrō," in the conversation between O Yone and Shijō, where attention is drawn to it in a foot-note.

¶ 114. At other times,—and this is a very favourite idiom,—no is employed as a kind of equivalent for the word koto meaning "act," "fact." This construction is specially apt to occur in conjunction with the substantive verb da or desă, and is generally best rendered in English by the phrase "it is that," or "is it that?" For instance, a man has made an appointment, but a note comes from him about the time he is expected to arrive. One of the bystanders, observing this, says:

Konai no darō. { "I suppose it is that he Will-not-come fact probably-is. (isn't coming."

N. B. Though the sense is properly that of koto, may not no, after all, be here derived from the word mono by apocope of the first syllable? For notwithstanding what has been said in ¶ 54 concerning the distinction to be drawn between koto and mono, a certain amount of confusion in the use of the two words can scarcely be denied; and as a matter of fact, one not infrequently hears such expressions as konai $mon[o] dar\bar{o}$.

In such contexts, the word no may be, and in familiar conversation generally is, clipped of its vowel, so that it sinks into the single letter n. Thus the above example might equally well be $Konai\ n$ deshō (conf. ¶ 343-5).

Nani wo suru n' desŭ ? \ "What is it that you are What (accus.) do fact is? \ doing?"

Massugu ni iku n' desŭ ka? { "Am I to go straight straight-ly go act is " { I am to go straight on?"

Aru no? { "Is there?" "Do you mean to say that there is?"

N. B. As shown is this last example, no cannot be clipped of its vowel when standing at the very end of a sentence.

The exact force of no preceding the verb da or desu may be practically exemplified by comparing, say, Nan wo shimasu ? "What are you doing?" with Nani wo suru n' desu ?." What is it that you are doing?"

¶ 115. The verb da, "is," and the postposition no combine to form the word dano, which serves for purposes of enumeration. Dano must, like the Latin que, be repeated after each of the items enumerated, thus:

Shishi dano, tora dano, zō) "Lions, tigers, elephants, dano, rakuda dano." and camels."

There is a difference between dano and ni (see ¶ 109) used enumeratively. Ni is simply copulative, dano conveys the idea of a multiplicity of objects. Thus, when a Japanese says sake dano, sakana dano, kwashi dano, he means to convey to his hearers the idea of a variously assorted feast, including possibly other good things besides the liquor, fish, and cakes enumerated. But when he says sake ni, sakana ni, kwashi, he speaks of just those three and no more. Observe, moreover, that the word dano is somewhat vulgar. The polite equivalent is de gazaimasŭ no, but this is less often used. No sometimes serves as an enumerative after other than the substantive verbs. Thus:

Kimi ga warukatta no," Talk Mental-feelings (nom). were-bad frightened and so forth, to. osoroshii mi I have had a rough whatand that, fearful eyes time of it. I can tell atte (Famil.) having-met (I) have-come.

N. B. No, in its proper sense of "of," is sometimes replaced in the higher style by the Chinese word teki, #G. Sometimes the two are used together, as seiji-teki kakumei, or seiji-teki no kakumei, lit. "a revolution of politics," i.e., "a political revolution."

SHI.

¶ 116. Shi, a postposition which is not capable of translation into English, has a sort of enumerative force, and serves as a kind of pause, thus:

Kono nikat wa, Fuji mo to storey as-for, Fujiyama also storey here you can mieru shi, umi mo mieru shi; makoto see Fujiyama and is-visible, seu also is-visible; truth in keshiki desü.

in, good view is.

"From the second storey here you can see Fujiyama and you can see the sea, —truly a beautiful view."

Shi is frequently appended to the verbal form in mai (the "improbable present or future"). Thus, when bandying words with a jinrikĭsha-man who should attempt to make an overcharge, one might say:

Hajimele kuruma voo
For-the-first-time vehicle (accus.)
tanomi ya shimai shi, ask as-for,(I) probably-do-not;
taigai sōba for-the-most-part market-price mo shille iru voo!
also knowing am (emph.)

"You don't imagine, do you? that this is the first time I have hired a jinrikĭsha, and that I don't know the proper fare!"

Occasionally shi seems to terminate a sentence; but this is only because the speaker, after finishing the first clause, finds himself at a loss concerning the second, and so perforce leaves the sentence unfinished.

N. B. Do not confound the postposition shi with shi the "indefinite form" of the verb suru, "to do," which appears in such idioms as mi mo shi, kiki mo suru, "one both sees it and hears it."

TO.

¶ 117. To originally had the sense of our demonstrative pronoun "that," but it now has the sense of our conjunction "that:"

```
Uso da to iimasŭ. \ Lie is that says. \ Hontō da to omoimasŭ. \ Truth is that think. \ \ Truth is that think.

N. B. Originally therefore the sense was: "It is a lie. He says that." "It is truth. I think that." The conversion of the demonstrative pronoun into the conjunction came about gradually in the case of to, as in the case of its English equivalent "that."

In the above, and in most similar phrases, English idiom generally prefers to omit the word "that;" but to cannot so be omitted in Japanese. The following are instances of to meaning literally "that," but not lending itself to expression in idiomatic English:

Omae san no na wa,

You Mr. 's name as-for, nan to in ka? (Said to a comwhat that say ? mon person.)

What is your name?'

more lit. "As for the name of Mr. you, what [do people] say that it is?"

"Tōkyō Maru" to Maru," more lit. "A vessel [of Maru," more lit. "A vessel [of which people] say that it is the Tōkyō Maru," (Conf. p. 58 for this important it om.)

Similarly in the case of such onomatopoetic adverbs as hatto, kitto, patatto, etc., where the to (strengthened into tto) is, properly speaking, a separate word, thu

\(\text{" I started," more lit.} \) thought \(\text{that}^2 \) [it is \(\text{hat}^1 \) \(\text{l''} \) Ha¹tto² omoimashĭta³.

Nochihodo¹ kitto² mairimasŭ³. { "I will certainly² come³ later-on¹."

Pata1tto2 ochimashita3. "It fell flop1."

Under this heading, too, comes the idiomatic use of to at the end of a sentence; for some verb must always be mentally supplied after it. Take, for instance, the common colloquial phrase Nan to ? "What did you (or he) say?" standing for Nan to osshatta? (polite), or Nan to itta?

¶ 118. To itte, "saying that;" to omotte, "thinking that;" to kiite, "asking (lit. hearing) whether," and similar gerundial phrases, are often contracted to tote (vulgarly tte):

Honourable hot-water to, (1) go tote, demashita. "He went out saying that he was going to the bath." (saving) that, went-out.

Tote frequently has a sort of oppositive force, as in the following examples, where it may be best parsed as standing for to itte mo, "even saying that," i.e., "even supposing that." (Conf. also ¶ 289.)

Ikura gakumon shita How-much okonai ga tote. even-saying-that, conduct (nom.) that a man may study how warukereba, if-is-bad. narimasen. becomes-not.

study have-done "However much a man may study (more lit., saying much), nothing will come of it if he is badly behaved."

Zōhei-kyoku wa, muyami ni "You can not get as-for, recklessly Mint shown over the Mint itta simply by going there and even-saying-that, asking to see it." dekimasen. haiken wa adoring-look as-for, forthcomes-not.

- N. B. Women and the lower classes often end a sentence by tte, when they should say to iimasñ or to iimashīta.
- ¶ 119. To sometimes means "and." When it has this sense, it is, like the Latin que, generally repeated after each noun. Even when not so repeated, it always belongs to the word immediately preceding it, not to the word following it. Europeans often make the mistake of commencing a clause with to, in imitation of the European idiom which introduces clauses by the conjunction "and." But this sounds ludicrous in Japanese:

Anata to, watakushi to. "You and I."

Furansu to, Doilsu to. "France and Germany."

Certain idiomatic uses of to may best be classed under this head, thus:

Musüko to fülari.

Son_and two-persons.

Ano hito to ikimashita.

That person and (1) went.

Okiru to sugu ni.

Rise and immediately.

Kore to wa chigaimasü.

This and as-for, (it)differs.

"Two counting my son."

"I went with him."

"As soon as I got up."

"It is different from this."

Observe also such adverbial phrases as shi-awase to, "luckily."

¶ 120. To sometimes comes to mean "if" or "when." It has this sense only after the present tense of verbs and adjectives, thus:

So suru to, shikararemasu.) "You will get scolded if so do if. get-scolded. you do that."

Sugu ikanai to,
```

Immediately go-not if, "You will be too late if you okuremasŭ."

are-lute.

Sō mōshimasŭ to, sugu ni "When I said so, he said when, immediately immediately gave me a shikararemashita. scolding." got-scolded.

¶ 121. Observe the use of to in such phrases as the following, where it is not susceptible of any English rendering:

tsumotte, vama to) Dust accumulating, mountain comes a mountain." naru. becomes.

"Dust accumulating be-(A proverb used to inculcate the importance of little things.)

Mizu ga dete, nivea Water (nom.) issuing, gurden ga umi to natte shimaimaoverflowing" (of the neighga umi to natte shimaima-(nom.) sea shita.

bouring stream, etc.).

Observe the strong affirmative force of to (generally followed by mo) at the end of an assertion, thus:

"Are there any? - Of Arimasŭ ka ?—Arimasŭ to course there are!" or, "I should just think there were!" mo!

To wa or tote sometimes replaces to mo in such strongly affirmative phrases.—For to mo and to zva iedomo in concessive phrases, see ¶ 288 and ¶ 289.

WA.

¶ 122. Wa was originally a noun signifying "thing," hence "that which," "he, she, or they who"; but it is now used as a separative or isolating particle, corresponding in some measure to the French quant à, or, when repeated antithetically, to the Greek $\mu \acute{\epsilon} \nu$ and $\delta \acute{\epsilon}$. Perhaps the most perfect idea of the character of a Japanese word or phrase isolated by means of zva is given by such French constructions as "Lui, qu'est ce qu'il en dit?" "Ces gens qui viennent d'arriver, personne n'en sait rien, "-where the words "lui" and "ces gens qui viennent d'arriver" are, as it were, lifted out of the regular current of the sentence and set in a place apart. "As for," "with regard to," "so far as......is concerned," are the most explicit English equivalents of wa, which has accordingly been rendered by "as for" in most of the literal translations of the examples scattered throughout the present work. But in practice its force is generally sufficiently indicated in an English translation by an emphasis on the equivalent of the word to which wa is suffixed, or by placing that word at the beginning of the sentence or clause. A slight panse, which may sometimes be indicated by a comma, is usually made after voa:

Budo-shu vvo sŭkoshi atalamele, Winc (accus.) a-little warming, biiru vva sono mama de becr us-for. that condition in yoroshii.
(is)good.

"Warm the claret
a little; but so far as the beer is concerned, that will do as it is."

Konnichi zva, yoi To-day as-for, yood lenki de gozaimasŭ. veather (it) is. "To-day it is fine weather." (i.e., "Whatever it may have been other days, to-day at least it is fine.")

Oki wa, yohodo nami ga

Ima voa le-sŭki de gozaimasŭ, { "Now I am at Now as-for, hand-empty am. { leisure."

Koko no ido vea,

Here 's well us-for,

suidō desŭ.

vater-road is.

"The water in this well comes from the aqueduct."

(Not "The well here is an aqueduct" (!)

(Not "The well here is an aqueduct" (!) as the beginner might suppose, if he mistook wa for a sign of the nominative case.)

Kore de wa komarimasŭ. quandary." (The de wa may may this by am-hampered. be contracted into ja; see \$\\ \$\ 89.\)

Tabako wa nomimasen.

as-for, importation (is).

Nishi wa Fuji, kila "To the west stands West as-for, Fujiyama; north wa Tsŭkuba de gozaimasŭ.
as-for, Tsukuba (it) is.

¶ 123. In an interrogative sentence, wa would sometimes seem to be the means of asking a question; but an ellipsis must always be supplied. For instance, Inu wa? pronounced in an interrogative tone of voice, practically signifies "Where is the dog?" But literally it is, "As for the dog, (where is he?)"

Wa also sometimes occurs at the end of a sentence with a certain interjectional, exclamatory, or emphatic force. This idiom is heard only in quite familiar talk, and especially from the lips of women; thus:

Watashi vva, kono hō ga ii vva! "I like this Me as-for, this side (nom.)(is)good indeed! one, I do."

¶ 124. The peculiar power of wa to separate or limit ideas is well-shown in some of the negative phrases given in the Chapter on Syntax, ¶ 433, and also in such favourite verbal idioms as the following:

Aru ni wa arimasu ga, sŭkunō Is in as-for, is whereas, scarce gozaimasŭ. (or Aru kolo wa, etc.) it is true, but they are scarce."

Ame wa, fulle imas ka?—Furu ni Rain as-for, fulling is? Falls in wa fulle imasu ga, hidoi koto —Yes, it is rainas-for, fulling is whereas! intense fact ing, but it is not wa gozaimasen.

"Is it raining?

"Yes, it is raining, but it is not raining hard."

Kotowatte okimashita. Refusing (I) put. "I refused."

Kotowatte wa oki- ("Irefused, but..." (the sentence mashita ga.... (remaining unfinished.)

The former of these two phrases states the fact of the refusal, and nothing more. The latter emphasises it; but the emphasis is the emphasis of hesitation, as if one should say, "I did indeed refuse, but my refusal was tempered by politeness," or "I left myself a loophole for taking back the refusal," etc., etc.

Tsŭkai zva kila ga, lonin Messenger as-for, came although, personzva ki zva shinai. in-question as-for, coming as-for, does-not. (*Oh! yes; a messenger came, but the man himself didn't."

Very often we hear ki wa shinai (and similar constructions with other verbs), where simple konai, etc., would seem sufficiently clear according to European ideas. But the Japanese prefer the more emphatic form with wa, whenever any mental reservation or allusion implies the existence somewhere or other of contradiction or opposition to the idea which is actually expressed, as illustrated in the two foregoing examples.

N. B. When thus suffixed to the indefinite form of a verb (ki is the indefinite form of the irregular verb kuru, "to come"), wa is often pronounced ya; thus ki ya shinai for ki wa shinai.

wa. 89

¶ 125. A consideration of the foregoing examples, and indeed of those which any page of Japanese affords, will convince the student that wa is not, as some European writers have erroneously imagined, a sign of the nominative case. The following example, which is the last we shall quote, illustrates this fact almost to the point of absurdity. It is race-day, let us suppose. You meet a friend walking in the direction of the race-course, and you say to him:

Anala wa, keiba desŭ ka?
You as-for, horse-race is i.e., if interpreted on the hypothesis of wa being a sign of the nominative case, "Are you a horse-race?" (!) The proper meaning of course is "As for you, is it the races (that you are going to)?" or more simply "Off to the races, eh?" The utmost that can be said with regard to the so-called nominative force of wa is that the word followed by wa must, in not a few instances, be rendered by a nominative in English, though it is never properly a nominative in the Japanese construction. The nearest approach made by the Colloquial Japanese Language to the possession of a nominative particle is in the particle ga (see p. 66). But even this, as has been there explained, originally meant "of," that is to say, was a sign of the genitive, not of the nominative.

¶ 126. Europeans often find it hard to decide whether to say wa or ga; and it is true that two Japanese phrases, one with wa, the other with ga, must often be rendered by the same English words. There is, however, a slight difference of intention. When (if we may so phrase it) a speaker has in his mind a predicate and gives it a subject, he uses ga; when the subject is uppermost in his mind and he gives it a predicate, he uses wa. As a general empirical rule, seemingly but not really contradicting the above enunciation of principle, the use of ga necessitates emphasis on the subject in the English translation, whereas the use of wa necessitates emphasis on the predicate. The Japanese themselves, as stated in ¶ 27, are not much given to the use of such vocal emphasis. They prefer a change in the actual words.

To take an example:—if you are expecting your Japanese teacher, the servant will probably inform you of his arrival by saying Sensei wa miemashita, "The teacher has come" (lit. appeared). The etymological sense is, "As for the teacher, he has come." That is to say, the teacher (subject) was in the servant's thoughts as a daily visitant, and now here he is. But should the same personage arrive in the middle of the night or at some other unusual hour, the servant will say Sensei ga miemashita; i.e., "The teacher has come,"-more properly and etymologically, "The coming of the teacher." In the servant's mind his coming at such an hour (predicate) is the curious and important thing. So too of an unexpected death one would say, for instance, Hayashi san ga shinimashita, "Mr. Hayashi is dead." But if he had long been known to be past recovery, the phrase would be Hayashi san wa shinimashita, "Mr. Hayashi is dead." Similarly Kore ga ii means "This is good;" whereas Kore wa ii means "This is good." The distinction flows naturally from the original force of the two particles, Kore ga ii being properly "the goodness of this." while Kore wa ii is properly "as for this, it is good."

In comparative sentences the rule is quite simple. The subject takes ga, while the word denoting the thing with which the subject is compared is generally separated off by means of wa: thus: Kore yori wa, are ga ii, "That is better than this."

- Ties to the original genitive force of ga, will perceive that there is nothing specially emphatic about ga in the Japanese idiom, though an emphasis on the word preceding it is its nearest equivalent in English. On the other hand, wa is emphatic and separative in Japanese, though there will generally be no emphasis on the corresponding portion of the phrase in English, when the English noun is a nominative. Wa, however, corresponds to an emphasised word in English whenever that word is not a nominative, as shown by several of the examples given above.
- ¶ 128. It may be asked: what is the rule in the case of two nominatives in antithetical clauses? The answer is that either ga may be used in both, or else wa may be used in both. Thus the fourth example on p. 87, Kore wa wasei, are wa hakurai, "This is of native make, that is an imported article," might be altered to Kore ga wasei, are ga hakurai. The effect would be to throw the emphasis more strongly on the two subjects than on the two predicates.
 - N. B. Sometimes wa, occurring after an adjective in ku, must be rendered by "if," thus:

Voroshiku wa, de-kakemashō. { "If you are all right, let us start."

Elegant speakers sometimes prefer to say yoroshikuba, which is the form employed in the Book Language.

WO.

¶ 129. Wo is the nearest Japanese equivalent to a sign of the accusative case, thus:

Tamago wo uderu.

Eggs (accus.) to-boil.

To boil eggs."

"To receive a bride," t. e, to marry." (Of course said only of the man. A girl's marrying is generally called yome ni iku, lit. "to go as a bride.") Bride (accus.) morau. to-receive.

as-for-saying, (I)am-hampered.

Sonna kake-ne woo such excessive-price (accus.) icha, komarimasŭ. For-saying, (I) am-hampered. ("I don't know what to do if you ask such an exorbitant price," or more simply, "You should not ask such an exorbitant price."

"To await the coming of some one." Hito22.O comes (accus.) Person matsu. to-await.

¶ 130. Originally 200 was nothing more than an interjection serving, as it were, to interrupt the sentence and draw attention to the word to which it was suffixed. We must therefore not be surprised at its absence in many cases where European languages could not dispense with the accusative case. It is not that the wo has been dropped in such contexts, but that it never was there, thus:

Baka iu-na! (very rude). Folly say-not.

"Don't talk nonsense."

Meshi kuu toki. (famil.)
Rice eat time.

"When eating rice," i.e., "When dining."

Before the verb suru, "to do," wo is mostly absent, as:

Hon-yaku suru.

"To make a translation,"
"To translate."

"To do urgency," i.e., "to urge on." Saisoku suru.

¶ 131. The student will sometimes meet with, and probably be puzzled by, sentences like the following:

Daijin-gata wo hajime, "All the officials were Ministers (accus.) beginning(trans.), there, from the ministers sho-kwan-in made soroimashita. of state downwards." all-officials till were-complete.

Here the first clause literally means "placing the ministers of state at the beginning." It is therefore not unnatural that the word daijin-gata, being what we should term an accusative, should take zeo.

¶ 132. In the Written Language, zvo is often used adversatively at the end of a clause. But this is rare in the Colloquial, which prefers to use ga for that purpose, as already explained in ¶ 93, p. 67.

VA

¶ 133. Ya is an interrogative and exclamatory particle of constant occurrence in the Written Language. In the Colloquial it is less used, excepting in such contexts as Haru ya! "I say, Haru!" said when calling a person by name. It also occurs corruptly for wa after the indefinite forms of verbs, as explained in the N. B. on p. 88. Sometimes it has the sense of "and" or "or," thus:

Tonari no uchi de, inu ya) "They would seem to Next-door's house at, dog and be very fond of dogs and ga sŭki of fond to miete, cars in the house next that seeming, door; for they keep quite fond takusan ni katte orimasu. quantity in rearing are.

....ya nani ka.

a number of them."

{ ''.... or something or other."

YE.*

¶ 134. Ye means "to," "towards," hence sometimes "at:"

Gakkō ye o ide desŭ ka? \ "Do you go school to, honourable exit is ? \ to school?"

^{*} Some good authorities prefer the orthography E. In Classical Tapanese the word is spelt \wedge (he). We follow Hepburn's and Brinkley's dictionaries, as usual, Sŭtensho ye iki-gake ni, chotto the telegraph office on my Station towards going-while, denshin-kyoku telegraph-office way to the station." vorimasŭ. will-stop.

Koko ve oite oite kudasai. ("Please put it Here to putting putting condescend. | down here."

.V. B. The second oite is the same verb as the first, but has only the force of an auxiliary (see ¶ 298).

FORI

¶ 135. Yori means "from," "since," "than:"

Kamigala yori.

f "From Kyōto" (or its neighbourhood).

Issakujitsu yorı.

"Since the day before vesterday."

Nani yori kekkō na o Anything than, splendid honourable did present." (More lit. shina wo, arigato gozaimasŭ. for your more-splendidarticle (accus.) thunkful am.

"Thanks for your splen-(than-anything present.)

POSTPOSITIONS COMBINED.

¶ 136. Postpositions may be combined in Japanese, much as in English we say "in at," "in by, "away from," etc. Some instances have already occurred in the preceding portions of this chapter. Here are a few more :-

Go shimpai ni wat "It is not worth your troubling about." (A'i wa is more emphatic than ni August anxiety to oyobimasen. alone would be. For a still more emphatic construction with ni wa, ce ¶ 124.) reaches-not.

koto ni wa.... Oshii "It is a pity that. .." fact as indeed.... Regrettable

N. B. Phrases of this kind are idiomatic and in constant use.

fū-ni-ji yori mo osoku "It won't do to to the later than twelve natcha ikemosen."

Ano hen mo, molo (That neighbourhood also, origin also is much improved to wa yohodo hirakemashita. compared with what it with as-for, very much hus-opened-out.

Isogazu to mo yoroshii. (Familia:) { "You needn't Harrying-not even, (is) good hurry."

Kuru to ka iin ashila. { "If I mistake not, he said he would come."

Kao de mo o arai nasaru ka ? { "Will you wash Face even, honov oldy to-wash deign ? } { your face, Sir?"

N. B. De mo is often thus use! in a manner not needing translation into English, though retaining the force of "even" in Japanese.

Konnichi mode no I will do the accounts to to-day." (more lit. down to to-day." (more lit. down to to-day.") (more lit. the till-to-day's accounts.)

Sore made no kolo ni That till 's thing to itashimasho.

(I) neith-make.

Kore made ni mila kolo I had never seen it till This till in suw uct ga nakatta.
(nom.) was-not.

I had never seen it till (Made ni is stronger than made alone would be.)

N. B. Made ni often correspond to our word "by" in such phrases as myönichi made ni, "by to-morrow;" hachi-fi made ni, "by (i.e. not later than) eight o'clock." The Japanese mind does not clearly apprehend the shade of difference which with us, separates "by" from "till" in idioms of this class. Companion the N. B. to ¶ 100 for a case of a somewhat similar character.

¶ 137. No followed by other postpositions generally has the substantive force of the English word "one" or "ones," already exemplified on p. 78, thus:

Motto ii no wa arimasen ka? \ "Haven't you any More good ones as-for, are-not ? \ better ones?"

More u-little good ones (accus.)

misete kudasai, showing condescend.

"Please show me some rather better ones."

Okii no ga hoshii.

Biy one of (am) desirous.

"I want a big one."

Kō iu no mo hayarimasŭ "This kind too is Such ones also are-fashionable fashionable. So please look kara, goran nasai. because, august-glunce condescend.

Motto yasui no ni shiyō. \ "I think I will take More cheap one to will-probably-do. \ a cheaper one."

¶ 138. Though the no of no m may, as in the last example, be used in the sense of "one" or "ones," it more frequently signifies "whereas," "while," "when." It may be known to have this acceptation by observing that a verb (or an adjective equivalent to a verb) precedes it, as in the following sentence:

Moto no mama de yokalla Origin 's mamer by, was-good no ni, naze jun wo whereas, why order (accus.)
noshila ?
have-amended?

Why have you changed their order, when it did quite (Said, e.g., to a servant.)

As here exemplified, no m occurs chiefly in phrases expressive of censure or regret. Conf. \P 287 for further details concerning this important idiom.

¶ 139. Observe that wo and wa, when combined, change by euphony into wold, which is used to denote a specially emphatic accusative; also that de wa is often contracted into ja, as has already been incidentally mentioned in ¶ 89. $\mathcal{F}a$, owing perhaps to its being a modern corruption, sounds somewhat more familiar than de wa, but the two are always interchangeable:—

Kimono ni abura woba kakemashita. \ "I have stained Clothes on, oil (accus.) have-placed. \ my clothes with oil."

$$\left\{ \begin{array}{l} S\bar{o} \ de \ wa \ nai. \\ S\bar{o} \ ja \ nai. \end{array} \right\} \ \left(\begin{array}{l} \text{famil.} \\ \text{famil.} \end{array} \right)$$
 "That is not so;" "no."

Shubiki-gwai $\left\{ \begin{array}{c} de \ wa, \\ ja \end{array} \right\}$ teppo vo utsu "You mayn't Red-Une-beyond in, gun (accus.) strike shoot outside koto ga dekimasen. uet (nom.) cunnot-do.

¶ 140. Occasionally an ellipsis must be supplied. Thus to wa is sometimes equivalent to to in mono wa, as in the following sentence:

 $Go^1-j\bar{o}^2$ to^3 vva^4 , ("As-for* (the-thing-of-which people $nani^5$ vvo^6 iu^1 n'^8 say) that (it is) $go^1-j\bar{o}^2$, what is it they $des\check{u}^9$ ka^{10} ? (See Vocabulary.)

QUASI-POSTPOSITIONS.

¶ 141. What may be termed quasi-postpositions are really nouns preceded by the postposition no, "of," and used in a sense less concrete than that originally belonging to them. Such are, for instance:

```
no hoka, "exterior of," i.e., "besides" (metaph.).
no kage, "shade of," ,, "behind." no kawari, "change of," ,, "instead of."
no mukō, "opposite of," ,, "opposite, "beyond."
```

```
no naka, "interior of,"
                         i.e. "inside, in."
          "lower part of,",, "below."
no shita,
          "exterior of,",
                              "outside," "beyond."
no soto.
                          " \ " because of," \ " in order to."
         ''sake of," no tame,
                          ,, "inside, "in."
          "interior of,"
no uchi.
          "top of,"
                              "on, "upon."
no ue,
                          " "behind."
no ushiro,
          "back of,"
                          ,, "beside" (by the side).
no waki, "side of,"
```

We thus get such phrases as:

```
Ie no uchi,

Hei no soto,

"In(side) the house."

"Wara no naka,

"In(side) the godown."

"In(side) the godown."

"Outside of thought," i.e., "unexpectedly."

"Occasion of talking," i.e., "in the course of conversation."

Ano yama no kage,

"Behind those mountains."

¶ 142. When followed by a verb, the quasi-postpositions take ni after them, except in the case of the substantive verb "to be," which requires de, unless when signifying "there is," etc. (De aru is generally contracted to da; de gozaimasŭ to desŭ, and so on; see p. 64). Thus:

To-dana no naku ni Cupboard 's inside in, haitte imasŭ. entering is. "It is in the cupboard." (One might equally well say Todana no naka desŭ.)

Tsükue no ue ni notte imasen

Table 's top or riding isn't ka?—Tsükue no ue desü.

Table 's top (it)is.

"Isn't it on the table?
—Yes, it is."

Kono hoka ni, mata, "There are various kinds besides This-of besides, again this one." (For kono=" of this," see p. 54; similarly for sono immediately below.) iro-iro gozaimasŭ. various-kinds are.

Kawa no mukō de gozaimasŭ. { "It is on the other River 's opposite (it) is. } side of the river."

Note also the idiom sono kawari ni, lit. "change of that," used in the sense of "on the other hand."

¶ 143. When prefixed attributively to a noun, this class of words changes the ni into no, in accordance with the rule explained in ¶ 111, thus:

Tansu no naka no kimono. ("The clothes in the Chest-of-drawers's interior's elothes chest of drawers."

Kono hoka no shina-mono.

This-of exterior 's articles.

("The other things besides these."

Mon no waki no momiji wa, Gate 's side 's maple as-for, maple-tree by the gate rippa ni kōyō shimashita. splendidly red-leaf has-done. "'The leaves of the maple-tree by the gate have become beautifully red."

¶ 144. When a member of this class of words follows a verb. its force changes slightly, so as to correspond to that of an English adverb or conjunction, thus:

Kare kore suru uchi ni, might came on."

That this do wehile, i ga kuremashila.
y (nom.) darkened.

"While we were doing all this, night came on."
(Note the idiom kare kore, "that and this," or, as we should say, "this, that, and the other.") hi ga kuremashĭta. day (nom.) darkened.

 $S\bar{o}$ suru hoka, shǐkata so do except, way-of-doing a nai. "There is nothing else to be done." (nom.) isn't.

Kino furimashita kawari weather (is).

Whereas it rained yesterday's rain),

CHAPTER VI.

The Numeral

CARDINAL NUMBERS.

- ¶ 146. In European grammars the numerals are generally disposed of in a few lines, as forming a mere subdivision of the adjective. In Japanese the numeral is rather a species of noun, and a species of noun with marked peculiarities of its own, necessitating its treatment as a separate part of speech.
- ¶ 147. There are two sets of numerals, one of native and the other of Chinese origin. The native set is now obsolete except for the first ten numbers, which are as follows:—

SUBSTANTIVE FORM, FORM USED IN COMPOUNDS, ENUMERATIVE FORM,

hito(-tsiiki) ( 1 month)
1 hitotsu
2 f utatsu fŭta(- ,, ) ( 2 ) fū mi(-1, 1)
                              ,, ) m\bar{\imath}
3 milsu
4 yolsu yo(- ,, ) ( 4 ,, ) yō 5 ilsŭlsu
              itsu(- ,, ) ( 5 ,, ) itsu mu(-,,) (6,,) m\overline{u} 6 mutsu
7 nanatsu nana(-,,)(7,,) nana ya(- ,, ) ( 8 ,, ) yā
8 yatsu
                               ,, ) ko(ko)no
g kokonotsu kokono(-,,)(9 10(- ,, ) (10
10 10

N. B. It will assist the memory to notice that the even numbers are formed from the odds of which they are the doubles by a process of vowel-strengthening, the consonants being originally the same, though slightly disfigured in modern pronunciation, thus:

I hito (anciently probably pito,) 2 futa (anciently probably puta). 3 mi. 6 22211. 8 1/a. 4 10, 5 i/su (anciently i/u), 10 /0.

¶ 148. The substantive forms of the numerals may either be used quite alone, or they may follow the noun, or lastly they may take the postposition no, "of," and precede the noun. They very rarely precede a noun without the intervention of no. Thus :—

Ikutsu gozaimasŭ ka ?—Hitotsu, ("How many are ? - One. | there?-One." How-many Tsutsumi hitotsu, or "One parcel." Hitotsu no tsutsumi.

Milsu de takŭsan (de gozaimashō). ("Three will no Three by, great-deal will-probably-be. | doubt be plenty."

Tatsu de tarimasŭ ka ? \ "Will eight be enough?" Eight by, will-suffice ?

Tō bakari kudasai. "Please give me about ten." Ten about condescend.

Ikimo, 220 kaeri "Taking the same there and back again." also, returning hitotsu michi. one road.

- ¶ 140. The form used in compounds always precedes the noun to which it refers, as hito-tsuki, "one month;" fila-hako, "two boxfuls;" mi-ban, "three nights."
- ¶ 150. The enumerative form is used in counting over things, e.g. a bundle of paper money, linen to be sent to the wash, etc.

It51. Though the native Japanese numerals above "ten" are now obsolete for ordinary purposes, note that halachi, the old native word for "twenty," is still used in the sense of "twenty years of age," and that chi, "a thousand," and yorozu, "a myriad," or "ten thousand," are still retained in proper names and in a few idioms, e.g. Chi-shima, "the Thousand Isles," i.e., "the Kurile Islands;" Yorozu-ya, a favourite shop-name, probably originating in the fact of many sorts of articles being exposed for sale.

¶ 152. The set of numerals borrowed from the Chinese is:

      1 ichi, rarely ilsu
      6 roku, rarely riku

      2 ni, rarely ji
      7 shĭchi

      3 san 8 hachi

      4 shi
      9 ku, rarely kyū

      5 80
      10 jū

100 hyaku 1,000 sen 10,000 man or ban

N. B. Ichi also means "whole," "all," as ichi-nichi, "one day," but also "all day long." The native Japanese numeral hito, "one," has come to have the same secondary sense in certain cases, as hito-ban, "one night" or "all night."—The word ryō, properly "both," is often substituted for ni.

All the others are formed by combining these, thus:

11 jū-ichi	20 ni-jū	29 ni-jū-ku
12 jū-ni	21 ni-jū-ichi	30 san-jū
13 jū-san	22 ni-jū-ni	40 shi-jū
14 jū-shi	23 ni-jū-san	50 go-jū
15 jū-go	24 ni-jū-shi	60 roku-jū
16 jū-roku	25 ni-jū-go	70 shĭchi-jū
17 jū-shichi	26 ni-jū-roku	80 hachi-jū
18 jū-hachi	27 ni-jū-shĭchi	90 ku-j ii
19 jū-ku	28 ni-jīhachi	, 100 ip-pyaku (for ichi hyaku)

200 ni-hyaku 300 sam-byaku (for san hyaku)
400 shi-hyaku 500 go-hyaku
600 rop-pyaku (for roku hyaku) 700 shichi-hyaku
800 hap-pyaku (for hachi hyaku) 900 ku-hyaku
1,000 is-sen (for ichi sen) 10,000 ichi-man
100,000 jū-man 1,000,000 hyaku-man
108 hyaku hachi 365 sam-byaku roku-jū-go 1897 is-sen hap-pyaku ku-jū shichi
43,000,000 shi-sen sam-byaku-man

There is a term oku meaning 100,000, and a term $ch\bar{o}$ meaning 1,000,000; but they are scarcely ever used, being almost always replaced by multiples of man, as in the examples just given.

¶ 153. The Chinese numerals are not often used independently. It is customary to make them precede a noun, with which they form of sort of compound, as ichi-nen, "one year;" is-sun (for ichi sun), "one inch."

In forming such combinations, note the category of letter-changes of which the following are examples:

                                   "ten drops"
      iit-teki
```

N. B. Though the difficulty of making these letter-changes correctly will strike the beginner chiefly in the case of numeral combinations, the same euronomic rules apply to all other Chinese compounds, thus:

ket-chaku, from ketsu chaku, "decision," "final resolve." ten-pō, ,, ten hō, (See Vocabulary.)

^{*} Not in use.

[†] Some words in s do not change the s into z, thus san-satsu, "three volumes," not san-zatsu.

Nip-pon, from nitsu hon,
                          " Japan."
         ., aku kō.
                          "bad language."
ak-kō,
                          "a shampooer."
am-ma.
         " an ma,
mes-sō, ,, metsu sō,
                          "extravagant," zas-shi,
        , zatsu shi,
                          "a magazine," "a review."
                          "a groom."
bet-to.
        " betsu to.

(In practice the hyphen is generally omitted in such words.)

¶ 154. The Japanese numerals, as far as they go, are mostly employed with Japanese nouns, and the Chinese numerals with Chinese nouns, But there are numerous exceptions to this rule, for instance:

il-toki (but also hito-toki), "one hour."

f ŭta-f ūfu, "two married couples."

mi-ban, "three nights."

yo-nen, "four years."
```

After "ten," beyond which the Japanese numerals no longer run, the Chinese numerals are perforce employed with Japanese as well as with Chinese words, thus:

jū-ni hako, "twelve boxfuls." hyaku kumi, a hundred sets.
```

¶ 155. Usage plays various freaks with the numerals. Thus the Chinese numeral shi, "four," which is considered unlucky because homonymous with shi, "death," is in many contexts replaced by the equivalent Japanese numeral yo, for instance:

yo-nin, "four persons." (shi-nin means "a corpse.") ni-jū-yo-ban, "No. 24."

N. B. Colloquialism sometimes goes a step further, corrupting the yo into yon. Thus people may say yon- $j\bar{u}$, instead of shi- $j\bar{u}$, "forty."

Chinese shichi, "seven," is sometimes replaced by Japanese nana. This is done for clearness' sake, as shichi is easily confounded with shi, "four." Thus tradesmen will often say nana-jis-sen, instead of shichi-jis-sen, "seventy cents." But this is never either necessary or elegant.

¶ 156. Usage likewise establishes a shade of difference in the sense of certain expressions which would at first sight appear to be synonymous, thus:

hito-hako, "one boxful;" hako hitotsu, "one box."

hito-tsŭki, "one month;" ichi-getsu, "the first month," i.e., "January;" ik-ka-getsu, "one month." (For ka see ¶ 159, middle of p. 109.)

hito-ban, "one night;" ichi-ban, "number one." fita-ban, "two nights;" ni-ban, "number two."

N. B. Both these ban's are of Chinese origin; but they are different words written with different characters.

AUXILIARY NUMERALS.

- ¶ 157. In English we do not say "one bread," "two beers," but "one loaf of bread," "two glasses of beer." Similarly we say "ten sheets of paper," "a hundred head of cattle," "so many rubbers of whist." Compare also the Pidjin-English "piecey," in such expressions as "one piecey man," "two piecey house," etc. Words of this kind are, in Japanese grammar, termed "auxiliary numerals." "Auxiliaries to the numerals" would be more strictly correct. The term "classifier" has also been proposed; but "auxiliary numeral" is that which has obtained the widest currency. The auxiliary numerals constitute a highly important class of words. For whereas in English such expressions as those just mentioned are somewhat exceptional, they are the rule in Japanese.
- ¶ 158. In some cases, indeed, the numeral is prefixed directly to the noun, e.g., ichi-nichi, "one day;" ichi-nin, "one person;" ichi-ri, "one league." But usage ordinarily demands the insertion of an auxiliary numeral, as:

tera ik-ken, "temple one eaves," i.e., "one Buddhist temple."

futon sam-mai, "quilt three flat-things," i.e., "three-quilts."

onna roku-nin, "woman six person," i.e., "six women."

N. B. One may also say ik-ken no tera, sam-mai no futon, etc.

¶ 159. The choice of the auxiliary numeral appropriate to each class of words is fixed by custom, a mistake in this matter producing the same absurd effect as does a wrong gender in French or German. The Japanese auxiliary numerals are, however, easier to remember than the French and German genders, since they are generally more or less founded on reason, as will be seen by the following list of those most in use. As the auxiliary numerals are always employed, not independently, but in combination with the numerals proper, we give them here preceded in each case by ichi, "one," and ni, "two." The student should carefully notice the phonetic changes caused in many instances by the presence of ichi, and should refer to the table of changes on pp. 104-105. The presence of ni causes no such changes. An auxiliary numeral may therefore always be seen in its original shape when following that word. The chief auxiliary numerals are:

(ichi-bu, ni, etc.-) bu, "a class;" for copies of a book.

(it-chō, ni-)chō, "a handle;" for things with handles, such as muskets, jinrikĭshas, and many kinds of tools.

(ichi-dai, ni-)dai, "a stand;" for carriages and jinrikĭshas. (ip-puku, ni-)fūku, (various meanings;) for scrolls, sips of tea, whiffs of tobacco, and doses of medicine.

(ip pai, ni-)hai, "a wine-cup;" for cupfuls and glassfuls of any liquid; also for loaded junks or steamers.

N. B. Ip-pai also means "full."

(ip-piki ni-)hiki, "a fellow;" for most living creatures, excepting human beings and birds; also for certain quantities of cloth and sums of money.

(ip-pon, ni-)hon, "a stem;" for cylindrical things, such as sticks, trees, fans, pens, bottles, newspapers rolled up to be posted, etc.

(ichi-jo, ni-)jo, "a mat;" for mats.

(ik-ka, ni-)ka, sometimes ko, "the culm of the bamboo;" for a few things that have no other auxiliary numeral appropriated to them, more, however, in the bookish style than in genuine Colloquial.

(ik-ken, ni-)ken, "eaves;" for buildings generally.

(ichi-mai, ni-)mai, "a shrub;" for flat things, such as sheets of paper, coins, plates, coats, shirts, rugs, etc.

(ichi-mei ni-)mei, "a name;" for human beings. This word mei is somewhat bookish; nin is more genuinely Colloquial.

(ichi-nin, ni-)nin, "a person;" for human beings.

(is-satsu, ni-)satsu, "a volume;" for volumes of a book. Do not confound satsu with bu, which latter refers to complete copies of a work, irrespective of the number of volumes contained in it.

(is-shu, ni-)shu, a head;" for poems.

 $(is \cdot s\bar{o}, ni \cdot) s\bar{o}$, "a boat;" for vessels of every description.

(is-soku, ni-)s-ku, "a foot;" for pairs of socks, clogs, boots, etc.

(it- $t\bar{o}$, ni-) $t\bar{o}$, "a head; for horses and cattle; but $h\bar{i}ki$ may also be used.

(ichi-wa, ni-)wa, "a feather;" for birds. This word suffers irregular phonetic changes, thus:

4 shi-wa 3 sam-ba, 5 20-702 6 rop-pa 8 hachi-wa 7 shĭchi-wa. 10 jip-pa y ku-rva

- (hito-) soroe, "a match;" for sets of things of like nature, such as suits of clothes.
 - (hito-) suji, "a line;" for towels and for rope-like things.
 - ,, tomai, "a hut thatched with matting;" for godowns.

The native auxiliary numerals take the Japanese numerals before them up to "ten" inclusive, thus: fŭta-kumi, mi-ma, mu-tomai. After "ten" they perforce take the Chinese numerals (conf. ¶ 154), thus: jū-ni-kumi, ni-jū-ma, shi-jū-hachi-tomai. No euphonic changes take place.

- N. B. Things having no special auxiliary numeral appropriated to them are counted by means of the native Japanese numerals kitotsu, fütatsu, etc.; thus tamago hitotsu, "one egg;" momo tō bakari, "about ten peaches." Even things provided with a special auxiliary numeral sometimes replace the latter by hitotsu, fütatsu, etc., in slipshod talk. Purists, too, sometimes employ bookish auxiliary numerals now scarcely intelligible to the uneducated, as kagami ichi-men, "one mirror" (lit. mirror one surface), isu ik-kyaku, "one chair" (lit. chair one leg), where ordinary speakers would simply say kagami hitotsu, isu hitotsu.
- ¶ 162. In Classical Japanese, human beings are counted by means of the native numerals, with the unexplained suffix tari attached. Of these words the Colloquial language has retained only the following:

hitori (for hito-tari), "one person;" fulari (for fula-tari), "two persons;" yotlari (for yo-tari), "four persons;"

which are used concurrently with, but oftener than, their Chinese synonyms ichi-nin, ni-nin and yo-nin.*

¶ 163. Questions respecting number and quantity are asked by means of the word iku, which is, however, not used alone, but always in combination, thus:

iku-ra? how much?, lit. "about how much?", ra being the particle of vagueness already mentioned on pp. 29—30 as helping to form certain plurals;

iku-tabi ? "how often?"
iku-tsu ? "how many?"
iku-nin ?
ikŭ-tari ? ; ", ", (said of people);
iku-mai ? ", ", (said of flat things);
iku-hon ? ", ", (said of cylindrical things);

and so on with all the auxiliary numerals, no phonetic changes taking place in the latter.

¶ 164. Iku may be replaced by nani, usually shortened to nan in such contexts. Nani, though itself Japanese, is chiefly found before words of Chinese origin, thus:

nan-ji? "what o'clock?"
nan-nen? "how many years?"
nan-nin? "how many persons?"
nan-ri? "how many leagues?"
```

Very often the word hodo, "about," is added, thus:

nan-nen hodo P nan-ri hodo P

^{*} See ¶ 155, p. 106, for the substitution, even before Chinese auxiliary numerals, of Japanese j0 for Chinese shi, "four."

"How much?" is often rendered by ika-hodo ? dore hodo ? or dono kurai? all really meaning "about how much?"

¶ 165. The following are examples of the use of the Japanese auxiliary numerals and of the interrogative numeral words:

"One set of sake-cups."
  Sakazuki hito-kumi.
  Yōfuku hĭto-soroe.
                         "One suit of foreign clothes."

N. B. As the auxiliary numeral, so also does the Japanese equivalent of our word "pair" vary with the object to which it is applied. Thus people say by bbu is-sō, "a pair of screens."

hanatate it-tsui, ", ", flower-vases."

hashi ichi-zen, ", ", chopsticks."

tori hito-tsugai, ", ", fowls," etc.

ORDINAL, FRACTIONAL, ETC., NUMBERS.

¶ 166. What we term ordinal numbers are sometimes marked by suffixing the word me ("eye") to the Japanese, or bamme (ban="number") to the Chinese cardinal numbers; or else the word dai ("order") may be prefixed and nothing added, or dai may be prefixed and bamme added, to the Chinese cardinal numbers. All such forms take the postposition no, "of," when preceding a noun, thus:

Dai ni-ban, or simply ni-ban also dai ni-gō—constantly means "number two;"—similarly in the case of the other numbers.

Nan-go no shilsu ni "What is the number of irasshaimasŭ. deign-to-be?

Dai san-gō m orimasŭ. { "I am in number Order three-number in am. { three."

Iida-machi roku-chō-me i "No. 20 of the 6th ward ni-jū-banchi. (chi="earth.") of Iida street."

Kado kara san-gen-me. Corner from, third-house. The third house from the corner."

- N. B. Gen is the nigori'ed form of ken, the auxiliary numeral for houses (see p. 109).
- ¶ 167. Notwithstanding the existence of such forms as the above, the Japanese mind has not, properly speaking, a very clear idea of the distinction between cardinal numbers and ordinal numbers, for which reason the cardinals are often used in an ordinal sense, thus:

Meiji san-jū-ichi-nen (lit. "Meiji 31 year"), "the thirty-first year of (the chronological period termed) Meiji," i.e., "A.D. 1898," according to the European reckoning. Similarly ni-gwalsu or ni-gelsu (lit. "two month"), i.e., "February;" jū-ichi-nichi (lit. "eleven day"), i.e., "the eleventh day of the month."

- N. B. The context generally shows whether the number should be taken as a cardinal or as an ordinal. Sometimes the cardinal numbers are distinguished by the insertion of an auxiliary numeral. Thus "two months" would be not ni-getsu, but ni-ka-getsu, or, in native Japanese parlance and without any auxiliary numeral, futa-tsiki.
- ¶ 168. Years are usually counted by what are termed "year-names" (Jap. nengō), i.e., periods of irregular length with names arbitrarily chosen. The present period "Meiji" began with the overthrow of the Shōgunate and the restoration of the Mikado to absolute power in 1868. Occasionally of late, years have been counted from the fictitious era of the mythical Emperor Jimmu, who, according to the Japanese history books, was the first human monarch of this empire, and ascended the throne on the 11th February, B. C. 660.
- ¶ 169. January is called shō-gwatsu, lit. "the chief month;" sometimes also ichi-getsu, lit. "one month." (Gwatsu is the Go-on, getsu the Kan-on pronunciation of the same Chinese character 月, "moon;" see p. 7 for these technical terms.) The other months are formed by prefixing the Chinese numerals to the word gwatsu or getsu. Thus the months run as follows:

shō-gwatsu,
                                       "July."
            " January."
                         shichi-gwalsu,
ni-gwalsu,
                                       "August."
            "February." hachi-gwatsu,
san-gwalsu,
            "March."
                                       "September."
                        ku-grvatsu.
shi-greatsu.
            "April."
                                       "October," jū-gwalsu, go-gwatsu.
                        jū-ichi-gwalsu, "November."
            " May."
roku-gwatsu, "June."
                        jū-ni-gwatsu, "December."
```

¶ 170. The counting of the days of the month is a medley of native Japanese and imported Chinese parlance. We give the former in ordinary Roman, the latter in italic type:

misoka, "the last day of the month" (whether the 30th or 31st).
ō-misoka, "the last day of the year."

N. B. The word misoka is tending to pass out of educated usage.

¶ 171. The above forms, which are really cardinals, serve likewise for such expressions as "two days," "twelve days,"

"twenty days," etc. But tsuitachi cannot be used in the sense of "one day," because it is derived from tsŭki tachi, "the moon rising," i.e., "the first day of the moon." "One day" is therefore always ichi-nichi. Neither can misoka be used in the sense of "thirty days" or "thirty-one days," notwithstanding the fact that "thirty (miso) days (ka)" is its etymological meaning in Archaic Japanese.

¶ 172. Hours are counted by prefixing the Chinese numerals to the Chinese word ji, "time," "hour," thus:

ichi-ji, ''one o'clock."

yo-ji jū-go-fun, ''a quarter (lit. fifteen minutes) past four."

jū-ichi-ji han, ''half-past eleven."

jū-ichi-ji jū-go-fun, ''eleven forty-five."

jū-ni-ji jū-go-fun mae, ''a quarter to twelve."

han-ji-kan, ''half-an-hour." (kan="interval.") ichi-ji han kan, ''an hour and a half."

- ¶ 173. "Half," as just instanced, is han, or, when used substantively, hambun (lit. "half part").
 - N. B. The word hambun is used idiomatically in such expressions as kazari hambun, "half (i.e. partly) as an ornament,"—said, for instance, of the charm-bags worn by children; omoshiro hambun, "half in fun," where the ordinary rules of Japanese construction would lead one to expect to see hambun placed first instead of second. In all such instances the stress lies on the word hambun.

Other fractional and multiplicative numbers are expressed, as in the following examples, by means of the words bu, "part" (a corruption of bun, "part"), and bai, "double:"

sam-bu no ichi, "one-third."
sam-bu no ni, "two-thirds."
shi-bu no ichi, "a quarter."
```

```
shi-bu no san, "three-quarters."
jū-bu no san, "three tenths."
bai or ni-bai, "double," "twice as much."
sam-bai, "treble," "three times as much."
```

N. B. Such expressions as ni-bu, lit. "two parts," may mean either "two parts out of three" (i.e., "two thirds"), or "two tenths," or "two hundredths" (i.e., "two per cent"), etc.

¶ 174. Note also the following miscellaneous locutions:

ni-do, "twice." san-do, "thrice."

ni-do-me, {"the second time." {"the third time."} futari-mae, {"portions for two." {"thirty per cent."}

ni-wari, {"twenty per cent." {"thirty-five per cent."}

futatsu or ni-mai, etc.}

     fulalsu milsu, "two or three." shi-go-nichi, "four or five days."
      jū-go-roku-nin, "fifteen or sixteen persons."
     jū ni hak-ku, ten in, eight-nine. "eight or nine out of ten," hence ten in, eight-nine. "almost always."

CHAPTER VII.

The Adjective.

PRIMARY INFLECTIONS.

- ¶ 175. The salient points of the primary inflections of adjectives in the Tōkyō Colloquial may be compendiously described as follows:—
 - 1. Adjectives have a form in i, which is both attributive and predicative, that is to say, which may be used either prefixed to a noun, or else at the end of a sentence with the English verb "to be" understood, thus:

Takai yama, "A high mountain."

Yama ga takai, "The mountain is high."

Samui kaze, "A cold wind."

Kaze ga samui, "The wind is cold."

- N. B. Ga must not be mistaken for the equivalent of the English word "is." It is a postposition serving approximately to denote the nominative case. (See p. 66.)
- II. Adjectives have a form in \bar{o} or \bar{u} , which is used instead of the form in i when $gozaimas\check{u}$, the polite verb for "to be," is expressed. Thus:

Yama ga takō gozaimasŭ. "The mountain is high."

Kaze ga samū goznimashō. "The wind is probably cold."

III. Adjectives have a form in ku, which is used when a verb other than gozaimasŭ follows, and which often, though not always, corresponds to an English adverb in "ly;" thus:

Yama ga takaku miemasŭ. { "The mountain looks Mountain (nom.) high looks. } high."

Hayaku kite kudasai.
Quickly coming condescend.

" Please come quickly."

- ¶ 176. But in order to attain to a full and satisfactory intelligence even of these Colloquial forms, it is necessary to dig deeper, and to see how matters stand in the Classical language, from which the Colloquial forms are still in the act of being evolved. Observe at the outset that the inflections of Japanese adjectives have no reference whatever to such European grammatical categories as number, gender, or the degrees of comparison. Their object is partly to distinguish the attributive from the predicative relation, partly to distinguish the end of a mere clause from the end of a complete sentence.
- ¶ 177. The Classical termination of adjectives when used attributively is ki. Their termination when used predicatively at the end of a sentence is shi. Hence this latter is technically called the "conclusive form," thus:

ATTRIBUTIVE.

CONCLUSIVE.

Takaki yama, "A high { Tama takashi, "The mounnountain." { tain is high."

Samuki kaze, "A cold Kaze samushi, "The wind wind." | is cold."

¶ 178. It is from these two Classical forms in ki and shi that the single Colloquial form in i has originated, by the dropping of the distinctive consonants k and sh.

In set speeches and in the conversation of pedantic speakers, the "attributive form" in ki may still not infrequently be heard. It is employed exclusively in the case of the words gotoki, "like," "similar," and beki, a sort of verbal adjective corresponding to our termination "....ble," or to our auxiliary verbs "ought" or "should," thus,: shinzu-beki, "credible," "ought to be believed; "osorubeki, "terrible." (Conf. ¶ 192.)

N. B. The corresponding conclusive form beshi is no longer employed by educated speakers; but the bei perpetually heard at the end of sentences from the lips of the lowest classes in Eastern and Northern Japan, and signifying "shall," "will," "must," is a corruption of it. For instance, Sō dam-bei, "That is probably so," "No doubt you are right," represents an older Sō de aru-beshi, and is equivalent to the standard Colloquial Sō de gozaimashō.

¶ 179. The "conclusive form" in shi is still used in the words nashi, "non-existent," "is not," and yoshi, "good," concurrently with the commoner forms nai and yoi, thus:

 $Nani^1 mo^2 nashi^3$ (elegant) Nanni mo nai. (familiar) $\{ amiliar \}$ (is) non-existent, $amiliar \}$ (iii) $amiliar \}$ (iiii) $amiliar \}$ (iii) $amiliar \}$ (iii) amiliar

Yoshi, yoshi! "All right!"

It is also still to be heard in such emphatic locutions as Samusa zva samushi.

Coldness as-for, (it is) cold.

Cold," or, "It is cold with a vengeance."

¶ 180. The third Classical termination of adjectives is ku. It corresponds to the indefinite form of verbs (conf. ¶ 278 and ¶ 425), and its original function is that of predicate at the end of every clause of a sentence excepting the last. which alone takes the conclusive termination shi.

Yama takaku, kikū samuku, jinka sŭkunashi.

"'The mountains (of a certain country) are high, the climate is cold, and the human dwellings there are few."

This construction is now rarely heard except in set speeches, genuine Colloquial usage preferring either to end each clause by the form in i (sometimes followed by the expletive shi, as, in the last example but two on p. 127), or, oftener still, to turn the sentence some other way, thus:

akarui zva ōkii. alsui. as-for, big, "The sun a tama de. sono gururi 200 great, hot. shining around (accus.) ball. balt being, its around vūsei to iu sekai circle other worlds that (they) say worlds plunets called planets." marvalle iru. Shina voroshikereba. 1720 "The article Article alsowhereas-is-good, nedan 1110 vasui. good and cheap one." (is) cheap. mricealso

N. B. For the conditional (as yoroshikereba above) thus used, see \P 300. The following example shows it and the ku form in harness together:

Chītshaku 1120 nakereba. Commentary atso as-there-is-not, kvōshi 1110 naku, not-being, dictionary also teacher уō nai 10 in $n\alpha$ 1120 also is-not that say manner being go-ri itsze ni truly five-miles reason by, de arimashita. muchīi was. fog-inside "Truly great were my perplexities, being, as I was, without a commentary, without a dictionary, and without a teacher.

¶ 181. What the Colloquial has retained in full vigour is a secondary use of the form in ku, prefixed to verbs; and it has become rather usual, having regard to this use alone, to call the form in question the "adverbial form," because the European equivalents of Japanese adjectives in ku are often, though not invariably, adverbs, thus:

Omoshiroku kikoemasŭ. Osoku kaerimashita. Voku dekita.

"It sounds amusing.

"I came home late."

"It is well done."

Ükiku narimashita koto! "How big he has become!"

N. B. For koto thus used, see top of p. 39.

Naru-lake hayaku o
As....as possible quickly, honourable ide nasai.
exit deign.

("Please come quickly as possible."

- N. B. Just as vulgar speakers often omit the termination "ly" of English adverbs, so also, in familiar Japanese style, and not from the uneducated alone, do we hear such expressions as osoroshii warui, "dreadful(ly) bad," where osoroshiku warui would better accord with the old traditions of the language.
- ¶ 182. The verb "to be" is no exception to the rule whereby all verbs must be preceded by the adverbial or indefinite form in ku. It is therefore correct to say, for instance:

 Ano yama ga takaku gozaimasŭ. "That mountain is high."

 Kaze ga samuku gozaimashō. "The wind will probably be cold."

But Colloquial usage prefers to drop the k of the termination in such contexts. Moreover, after the k has been dropped, a crasis of the remaining vowels of the termination ensues. By this series of changes, (Stems in a) takaku passes through takau to tako.

(,, ,, i) yoroshĭku ,, ,, yoroshiu ,, yoroshiū. (,, ,, o) shiroku ,, ,, shirou ,, shirō.

(,, ,, u) samuku ,, ,, samuu ,, samū.

N. B. The genuine modern Colloquial possesses no stems ending in e. In earlier times, however, and in the semi-Colloquial of certain books we find such series as shigeku, shigeu, shigyō. beku, beu, byō. Hence it is usual to say:

Ano yama ga takō gozaimasŭ; Kaze ga samū gozaimashō; etc.

- N. B. The Kyōto dialect goes a step further even than that of Tōkyō, and prefers to make use of these abbreviated forms before all verbs whatsoever. The same usage is found in the more or less artificial Colloquial alluded to just above, as sometimes making its way into print.—Foreigners are apt to say Ano yama ga takai de gozaimasŭ, etc. The use of such expressions, though not absolutely forbidden, should be avoided. If addressing an inferior, say Ano yama ga takō gozaimasŭ. If addressing an equal or superior, say Ano yama ga takō gozaimasŭ.
- ¶ 183. It will be noticed that all the inflections of adjectives are added to a stem which terminates in one of the vowels. This stem is occasionally employed as an independent word. Thus Aka, Kuro, Shiro, "Brownie," "Blackie," and "Whitie," serve as names for dogs. The phrase naga no toshi tsŭki means "long months and years" (lit. "years and months"). But by far the commonest use of the stem is to form compound words, thus:
 - aka-gane, "copper;" from akai, "red," and kane, "metal."
 - hoso nagai, "slender;" from hosoi, "narrow," and nagai, "long."
 - kurushi-magire, "wildness caused by pain;" from ku-rushii, "painful," and magireru, "to be confused."
 - shiro-kane, "silver;" from shiroi, "white," and kane, "metal."
 - yasu-domari, "a cheap lodging; from yasui, "cheap," and tomaru, "to stay."
 - yo-sugiru, "to be too good;" from yoi, "good," and sugiru, "to exceed."

- N. B. There is a slight difference of signification, or at least of intention, between such expressions as takai yama, "a high mountain," and taka-yama, "a high-mountain," similar to that which we feel in English between "high land" and "the Highlands," or "a black bird" and "a blackbird." The compound form is more idiomatic, it tends to assume a specific meaning irrespective of the original signification of its constituent parts (e. g. fitta-go, "twins," from fitta, "two," and ko, "child"), and it is that preferred in proper names. Thus there are several places called Takayama, but none called Takai yama.
- ¶ 184. From the foregoing remarks, we may proceed to construct a table of the primary inflections of adjectives, as used in ordinary conversation. We take as specimens the adjectives takai, "high;" yoroshii, "good;" shiroi, "white; and samui, "cold;" i.e., one for each of the four vowels a, i, o, u, with which Japanese adjective stems almost invariably terminate:

Stem	"High."		"White."	"Cold."
Attribut. \Conclus. \	takai	yoroshii	shiroi	samui
Adverbial of Indefinite	r } takak u	yaroshĭku	shiroku	samuku
Predic. with verb '' to be expressed	$\int tak\bar{o}$	yoroshiû	shirā	samū

- N. B. Onaji, "same," is irregular, as its attributive (conclusive) form coincides in Colloquial with the stem. The adverbial form onajiku is still often heard; but with the verb "to be," more speakers say onaji de than onajiū.
- ¶ 185. The following are a few examples of the use of the primary inflections of adjectives:

SECONDARY INFLECTIONS.

¶186. Besides the primary inflections of adjectives, as set forth above, there is a series of secondary inflections which are employed to indicate tense and mood. Most of these secondary inflections are obtained by agglutinating parts of the verb aru, "to be," to the adverbial or indefinite form in ku, euphony producing certain slight changes, as will be seen by comparing the table on the opposite page with the paradigm of the first conjugation, to which aru belongs. The use of the various moods and tenses will be found explained in $\mathbb{q}$ 273 et seq. We have omitted from the table such imperative forms as yoroshikare, "be good!" and warukare, "be bad!" because they rarely if ever occur in practice, save in a few such idiomatic phrases as osokare hayakare, "sooner or later."

¶ 188. One of the most useful adjectives is what is called "the negative adjective nai." Its proper meaning is "non-existent;" but it commonly replaces the negative conjugation of the verb aru, "to be," and also sometimes corresponds to our preposition "without." Its inflections are as follows:

 	Attributive	nai.
Primary	Conclusive.	nai, rarely n	nashı.

Certain Past	{ yoroshĭku { nakatta,	} was not good.

And so on throug	h the other mood	s and tenses.
		ive conjugation in nai is rozaimasen, "not to be," thus:
Certain Present or Future	yoroshiū gozai- masen,	is or will not be good.
		{probably is not or will not be good.
And so on through	h the other mood	s and tenses.

Nai itself is not susceptible of the negative conjugation. There is no such expression as naku nai, "not non-existent."

N. B. Positive adjectives happening to end in nai, as, for example, kitanai, "dirty," must not be confounded with adjectives in the negative form. The negative of kitanai is kitanaku nai, following the paradigm given in the above table. Similarly with abunai, "dangerous;" sikumai, "scarce," etc.

COMPOUND AND DERIVATIVE ADJECTIVES.

¶ 191. Compound adjectives are numerous, and offer no difficulty. They sometimes consist of two adjectives, more frequently of a noun or verb followed by an adjective, thus:

- usu-akai, "light red," "pink;" from usui, "thin," "light-coloured," and akai, "led."
- usu-gurai, "dusk," "almost dark;" from usui, "light-coloured," and kurai, "dark."
- kokoro-yasui, "intimate;" from kokoro, "heart," and yasui, "easy."
- yondokoro-nai, "unavoidable;" from yoru, "to rely, tokoro, "place," and nai, the negative adjective.
- kiki-gurushii, "ugly (to hear);" from kiku, "to hear," and kurushii, "painful."
- mi-gurushii, "ugly (to look at);" from miru, "to see," and kurushii, "painful."
- wakarı-nikui, "difficult (to understand);" from wakaru, "to understand," and nikui, "odious,"
- wakari-yasu, "easy (to understand);" rom wakaru, "to understand," and yasui, "easy."
- ¶ 192. There are various classes of derivative adjectives. Of these the chief are:—
 - I. Those in beki, corresponding to our phrases with "must" or "should," or to our adjectives in "....ble," and already noticed on pp. 121-2 as being now used only in attributive constructions. It is to verbs that beki is suffixed,—in the first conjugation to the present tense, as aru-beki, "should be," "necessary," in the second and third conjugations to the indefinite form, as tabe-beki, "eatable;" dekibeki, "possible;" not taberu-beki, dekiru-beki. In the Written Language, beki is suffixed to what is termed the "conclusive form" of the present tense of the second and third conjugations, i.e., a short form ending in u without a following ru, thus: tabu-beki, (i)deku-beki; and this use may still sometimes be heard in the Colloquial. A like rule obtains in the case of the irregular verbs kuru and suru, which always make ku-beki and su-beki. The verb miru is peculiar, making either miru-beki or mi-beki.

Su-beki koto. "A thing to be done."

Do-must thing.

Shinzu-beki koto. "A credible thing."

Believe-must thing.

Kono hen ni miru-This neighbourhood in, seebeki tokoro ga gozaimasen kar shoudd places (nom.) are-not " this neighbourhood?"

is-not.

Union kamau-beki koto

business."

Kore wa mukō ye yaru-This as-for, opposite to sendbeki mono desŭ. must thing is.

- N. B. Observe how our English passive idioms are replaced by active idioms in Japanese, following a general tendency of the language commented on in ¶¶81—82, ¶ 427, and ¶ 439.
- ¶ 193. II. The so-called "desiderative adjectives" in tai, as tabetai, "desirous of eating," "hungry;" ikitai, "desirous of going." These will be treated of when we come to speak of the verb, ¶ 242 and ¶ 285.
- ¶ 194. III. A noticeable class of derivative adjectives is formed by agglutinating to nouns the termination rashu, which corresponds to the English terminations "ish" and "ly," and occasionally to some such phrase as "said to be," or "I think," thus:

baka-rashii, "foolish;" from baka, "a fool." kodomo-rashii, "childish; from kodomo, "children."

A much smaller class is obtained by reduplicating an adjective stem and agglutinating the suffix shii, thus: araarashii, "rude and rough;" tō-dōshii, "lengthy;" uloutoshii, "cold" (metaph.), "estranged."

¶ 195. It may be well to notice, in connection with these classes of derivative adjectives, two classes of verbs derived from adjectives. One of these is obtained by suffixing to the stem the suffix garu, a contraction of ge aru,—ge or ke (氣) being an old word signifying "spirit," "air." When added to the desiderative adjective in tai, the resulting compound suffix is tagaru:—

kozvagaru, "to think fearful;" i.e., "to be frightened," from kozvai, "fearful."

from kowai, "fearful."

mezurashigaru, "to think strange;" from mezurashii, ikilagaru, "to want to go;" from ikilai, "wanting to go,"—itself the desiderative adjective of iku, "to go."

"strange."

N. B. Observe that garu occasionally serves to verbalise nouns, thus: zamengaru, "to regret," from zamen, "regret;" iyagaru, "to dislike," from iya, "nay!" "repugnance." Also that the termination tagaru often means "to be apt to....." rather than "to want to"

Of the second class of adjective-verbs the following specimens will give an idea:

hiromeru, "to spread" (trans); hiromaru, "to spread" (intrans.), from hiroi, "wide."

maromeru, "to make round," from marui, "round."

N. B. Both these classes of verbs are, like verbs in general, susceptible of the passive and causative forms (conf. Chap. IX), thus Mezurashigarareru, "to be thought strange," "to be lionised."

Urayamashigarareru, "to be regarded with envy," from urayamashigaru, "to regard with envy," itself derived from urayamashii, "enviable."

Ureshigaraseru, "to cause to feel joyful," i.e, "to make happy;" from ureshigaru, "to feel joyful," itself derived from ureshii, "joyful." Hiromesaseru, "to cause to spread."

QUASI-ADJECTIVES.

- ¶ 196. There are large numbers of words in common use, such as nama, "raw;" shizuka, "quiet;" yusela, "thin;" koraerarenai, "unendurable," which at first sight appear to be adjectives, and which must be translated into English by adjectives, but which are not true adjectives in Japanese, either as regards origin or grammatical treatment. Some of them are nouns, some are verbs, some are phrases formed from various parts of speech. They may be best understood by being classed under the following five headings:—
- ¶ 197. 1. Nouns followed by no; as Amerika no, "of America," i.e., "American." Such are:

gwaikoku, "foreign countries:" gwaikoku no, "foreign." kin, "gold;" kin no, "golden." konaida, "a short while ago;" konaida no, "recent."

II. Nouns followed by na,* a corruption of the Classical

^{*} It has been stated in ¶ 112 (p. 78) that the postposition no often assumes the signification of the English word "one" or "ones," used substantively. Thus from the adjective nagai, "long," one can form the phrase nagai no, "a long one," and similarly from such quasi-adjectives as $sh\bar{o}jiki$ and kirci one can form the phrases $sh\bar{o}jiki$ na no, "an honest one;" kirci na no, "a pretty one," etc. This idiom must not be confounded with another nearly alike in sound containing the word nan, which it is difficult to explain in English except by the help of examples, and whose origin is obscure. The following sentences containing it may be taken as representative of its use:

verb naru, "to be" (not to be confounded with naru, "to become"); as shōjiki na, lit. "honesty being," i.e. "honest." Such are:

mendō, ''a bother;' mendo na. "bothersome." " uselessness " muda. muda na, " useless." rambō, "disorderly rambō na, " disorderly." conduct:"

shizuka, "quiet" (subst.); shizuka na, "quiet" (adj.).

N. B. No mostly follows concrete nouns, ma abstract nouns. Indeed the same noun will take no or na, according as it is viewed from the concrete or the abstract point of view. For instance, baka no hanashi means "a fool's story," "the sort of story a fool would tell," whereas baka na hanashi means "a foolish story" Very fine-

Kore deshō ka?—Aa! sore nan desŭ. { "Is this it?—Ah! yes; that Ano otoko wa, dōmo akip ("He is a very fickle fellow.—Yes in poi.—Sō sa! Mezurashii koto deed, because he is always hankering ga sŭki nan da kara, after something new and striking."

Taiyō wa asa dete, maiban "Most people suppose it to be the hikkomu no ga atarimac da to to rise in the morning and to retire taitei wa omotte imasu ga,—jitsu wa, asa taiyō ga deru no de wa nakute, taiyō no deru no ga asa ning, but that the sun rises in the morning, but that the sun's rising is the morning."

Of the various authorities, both Japanese and foreign, whom the present writer has consulted on the subject of this idiom, some pronounce it to be "relative," others "relative, elliptical, and reflective(!)." Some say that it is a corruption of naru, "to be." Others would trace it back to the word nani? "what?" used as a kind of expletive indicating vagueness, like "thingunimy" or "what-d'ye-call-'em" in yulgar English. Others again assert that the phrase means nothing at all. We ourselves incline to see in it a survival of the Classical particle nan. (Archaic na mo), which served to emphasise the word to which it was suffixed. Observe, however, that whereas Classical nan may occur before any verb, this Colloquial nan survives only before the verb "to be," as in all three examples given above.

drawn distinctions are sometimes produced in this way. Thus marui kao no hito means "a man with a round face," the concrete idea of "face" being here prominent. But maru-gao na hito means "a round-faced man," the abstract quality of round-facedness being uppermost in the speaker's mind. This particular phrase might be turned in yet a third way, viz., kao no marui hito, "a man round of face." Such idioms as this last are dealt with in ¶ 202. In some few cases no and na may be used almost indiscriminately. Thus we may say mugaku no hito or mugaku no hito equally well. But na is more common.

¶ 198. To the class formed by means of na belongs a numerous body of words obtained by adding $s\bar{o}$, "appearance," to the stem of adjectives proper or to the indefinite form of verbs, thus:

omoshiroi, "amusing;" omoshirosō na, "likely to be amusing;" "amusing-looking."

ĭmai, "nice to cat;" ĭmasō na, "appetising."

furu, "to rain;" furisō na, "likely to rain."

kikoeru, "to be audible;" kikoesō na, "audible, one would suppose."

The forms yosasō na, "apparently good," and nasasō na, "not likely to exist," are derived irregularly from the adjectives yoi, "good," and nai, "non-existent," by the insertion of an epenthetic syllable sa. Compounds of nai, such as tsumaranai, "worth nothing," "trifling," may either follow nai in this its irregularity, or else be made to conform to the rule affecting adjectives in general, thus: tsumaranasasō na or tsumaranasō na, "looking worth nothing," "trifling-looking."

¶ 199. Sometimes words of the above two classes may be compounded with the following noun, instead of being divided from it by no or na, for instance:

kara na (or no) hako, or karaba-ko, "an empty box."
km no tokei, "hin-dokei, "a gold(en) watch."

Sometimes, again, a word may be treated indifferently either as a true adjective or as a quasi-adjective of class II, for instance:

- ¶ 200. The forms of classes I and II given above are the attributive forms. When the quasi-adjectives of classes I and II are used predicatively at the end of a clause (conf. ¶ 180), no or na is replaced by de, "being," which thus corresponds to the termination ku of adjectives proper. When they are used predicatively at the end of a sentence (conf. ¶ 177), no or na is replaced by any tense of the verb "to be," such as da (familiar), desŭ (polite), de gozaimasŭ (very polite). The word de in such contexts has been treated of at some length in ¶ 88, pp. 62—64, which the student should carefully read over.
- ¶ 201. The following examples will show the use of these various forms of the quasi-adjectives of classes I and II:—

¶ 202. III. Phrases composed of nouns (including indefinite verbal forms used as nouns) followed by no, "of," and an adjective proper, as genki¹ no² yoi², lit. good² of ² spirits¹, i.e. "spirited," "lively." Such are:

me1 no2 chikai2, "near8 of2 eye1," i.e., "near-sighted." "far of ear," ,, "hard of hearing." mimi no tōi. wakari no hayai, "quick of understanding," i.e., "sharpwitted.

¶ 203. Great numbers of quasi-adjectives belonging to this Class III are formed by means of the words yai, "good" (often corrupted by the Tokyo people to ii), warui, "bad," and nai, the negative adjective. Such are:

benri no yai, "good of convenience," i.e., "convenient.
benri no warui, "bad of convenience, ,, "inconvenient.
shi-kata no nai, "no way to do," ,, "unavoidable."

Such quasi-adjectives in nai as that last instanced correspond to English adjectives with the prefix "un" or "in," or with the suffix "less," as Isumi no nai, "innocent;" kagiri no nai, "unbounded."

¶ 204. The above examples are all attributive in form. When the quasi-adjectives of class III are used predicatively, the postposition no changes to ga; thus:

Mimi ga tõi. "He is hard of hearing."

Shi-kata ga nai. "There is no help for it."

Ano ko wa, wakari ga hayai. "That child is sharp."

These examples are in the style used between intimates. It is always more polite to add the word gozaimasŭ, except when addressing an inferior. Of course with gozaimasŭ the i form of the adjective is exchanged for that with the long final vowel (see pp. 120 and 124). Thus the preceding examples would, in more polite parlance, become:

Mimi ga tō gozaimasŭ. Shĭ-kata ga gozaimasen (nō gozaimasŭ is not used).

Shi-kala ga gozaimasen (nō gozaimasŭ is not used). Ano ko wa, wakari ga hayō gozaimasŭ.

¶ 206. The above are the attributive orms. Most of them serve also to express the predicative relation at the end of a sentence. Observe, however, that no must then be replaced by ga, and the simple past tense in ta by the compound present tense in . . . tc iru (¶ 294), thus:

Ano
              ojiisan
                            wa.
                                    "That old gentleman is old-gentleman

f ĭıtotte
          iru.
  feet jochū Ano
                              kı
                     wa.
          maid as-for.
        kiite
                                 quick-witted."
(nom.) being-efficacious is.

Of course the simple verb may in all cases be replaced by the polite inflection in $mas\check{u}$. It is almost always so replaced in predicative constructions, except when an inferior is addressed. Thus the above examples would become, in ordinary polite parlance:

Ano ojiisan wa, f ŭtotte imasŭ (or orimasŭ). Ano jochū wa, ki ga kiite imasŭ (or orimasŭ).

- N. B. Quasi-adjectives of Class IV ending in shita, as tai shita, choito shita, are never used predicatively.
- ¶ 207. When employed predicatively at the end, not of a sentence but of a clause, most of the words of this Class IV turn into gerunds, thus: miete, f ĭttlote, dekinakite, etc. But sometimes a periphrasis with de is used instead, as: ki m iranai de.
- ¶ 208. Foreigners speaking a little Japanese constantly say yoroshii no cha, shiroi no tima, ōkii no neko, etc. etc. But this is mere "pidjin." It should be yoroshii cha, "good tea;" shiroi tima, "a white horse;" ōkii neko or ōki na neko, "a large cat." (Yoroshii and shiroi are always true adjectives, whereas we may either use ōkii as a true adjective, or ōki na as a quasi-adjective.) The mistake arises partly from a confusion between no and na, partly from the fact that nouns followed by no often correspond to the adjectives of European languages, e.g. Nihon¹ no² koloba³, "the languages of² Japan,¹" i.e., "the Japanese language;" molo¹ no² sumori³, lit. "intention³ of² origin¹," i.e., "the original intention." No is only used after adjectives in the sense of the indefinite pronoun "one or "ones," as already explained in ¶ 112:—

Dochi ga ii ?—Kuroi no. { "Which are the best?—The black ones."

¶ 209. Do not confound such Chinese quasi-adjectives as kirei, "pretty;" mumei, "anonymous," with real adjectives, simply because they happen to end in i. One cannot say kirei onna, "a pretty woman;" one must say kirei na onna. Similarly mumei na kalana, "a sword without the maker's name inscribed on it."

¶ 210. v. The words ko forming diminutives and \bar{o} forming augmentatives, together with the honorific prefixes o,* "honourable;" go, "august;" ki, "exalted;" and mi, "honourable," are quasi-adjectives, as in the following examples:

ko-bin, "a small bottle."

ō-bin, "a large bottle."

o tera. "an honourable Buddhist ter

o tera, "an honourable Buddhist temple," i.e., simply "a Buddhist temple."

go hon, "the august book," i.e., "your book." ki-koku, "the exalted country, i.e., "your country." o mi ashi, lit. "august honourable feet," i.e., generally "your feet."

N. B. \bar{O} and ko frequently cause the nigori'ing of the word to which they are prefixed, as \bar{o} -dera, "big temple;" ko-dera, "small temple;" ko-jima, "small island" (but \bar{o} -shima, without the nigori, "big island"). Such compounds as these are extremely common in place-names, the whole Japanese coast being lined with \bar{O} shima's and Kojima's. To express the idea "a big island," "a small island," the longer equivalents \bar{o} ki na shima, chiisa na shima, would sound more natural, and similarly in most other cases.

The honorifies o and go are also used adverbially, thus:

O¹ yasumi² nasai³, lit. "honourably¹ deign³ to rest,²" i.e., "good night."

Go yururi to, "augustly quietly that," i.e., "Don't injure yourself by overdoing it (in walking, etc.)."

A noticeable peculiarity of this fifth class of quasi-adjectives is that they only occur prefixed to other words. They cannot be used predicatively at the end of a clause or sentence. If, for instance, we want to predicate smallness of a thing, we cannot say that it is ko. We must use a totally distinct word, such as chiisai. (For further details concerning the honorifies o, go, etc., see Chap XI, ¶ 395 et seq.)

COMPARISON OF ADJECTIVES.

¶ 211. Comparison in Japanese is more often implicit than explicit. Thus, when referring to the relative height of Fujiyama and Asama-yama, a Japanese will not say as we should, "Fujiyama is the higher," but simply "Fujiyama is high" (Fuji ga takai, or Fuji no ho* ga takai), that is, it is high as estimated from the standpoint of the other mountain mentioned. Similarly, when pricing various goods, a Japanese will not say "Which is the cheapest?" but simply "Which is cheap?" (Dochira ga yasui?) i.e., by implication, cheap as compared with all the rest. Indeed, even in English the so-called positive is not infrequently a comparative by implication. When, for instance, we talk of a lake as large, what do we mean that it is larger than most other lakes in the country or in the world? When we say that such and such a man is old, what interpretation can be put on our words, except that the man in question is older than the majority of people? This is a consideration which will hardly occur to such as are familiar with European languages only; but it may well engage our attention for a moment as a curious, though simple, instance of the different channels in which Eastern and Western thought runs. The only disagreement between English and Japanese usage is that the Japanese employ

^{*} $1/\bar{o}$ means literally "side," hence "one," "ones," as Kono $h\bar{o}$ ga katai, "This one is hard." In phrases like that in the text, it has no English equivalent. Similarly in such contexts—and they are of frequent recurrence—as toshi no wakai $h\bar{o}$, "the younger of the two,"

these "comparatives and superlatives by implication" in nine cases out of ten, whereas with us they are somewhat exceptional.

¶ 212. Comparison may, however, be rendered explicit by using the postposition yori, "than," properly "from," as:

Asama yori, Fuji ga takai, or (more frequently) Asama vori. Fuji no hō ga takai, i.e., "(Viewed) from (the stand-point of) Asama-yama, Fujiyama is high," de sodatta hĭto wa. "A coasting popu-Sea-shore at grew-up people as-for, rikugun yori kaigun no heishi ni lation makes better to (sailors than it does army than, navy 's troops soldiers." tekishimasii.

Muda na hanashi voo suru yori Uscless talk (accus.) do than

"I consider silence wa, damatte iru than as-for. silent being side (nom.) omoimasŭ. (is)good that (I)think.

At bottom, the idiom is the same as that explained in the last paragraph, only more circumstantial. In negative phrases vori is replaced by hodo, which means "quantity," "amount," "about," e.g.

Asama wa, Fuji hodo takaku nai, lit. "As for Asama, (it) is not Fuji('s) amount high," i.e., "Asama-yama is less high than Fujiyama."

¶ 213. The idea of the superlative may be rendered explicit by the use of the word ichi-ban, "number one," "first," for instance:

That as-for, one-number amusing gozaimashō. will-probubly-be.

ichi-ban omoshiro (That will probably be number one amusing," i.e., "That will no amusing of all."

Fuji wo miru ni wa, yoroshiu gozainasŭ.

gozainasŭ.
gozainasŭ.
gozainasŭ.

Ichi-ban kisha.
One-number train.

The first train in the morning."

There are various other periphrases employed for the same purpose. Specially noticeable is one with the word uchi, "inside," "in," or its Chinese equivalent chū (nigori ed to $j\bar{u}$; conf. ¶ 28); thus:

Sono uchi no yosasō
That inside 's apparently-good na mono.

being thing.

"Whichever may seem to be the best of the lot."

Nihon-jū no yūshi. Japan-iuside s braco. { "The bravest man in Japan."

- ¶ 214. After all, the chief thing the student should bear in mind with regard to the Japanese equivalents for our comparative and superlative, is not to have recourse to them, but to accust m himself from the beginning to use the simple positive instead, which alone, in nine cases out of ten, is idiomatic.
- ¶ 215. "Still" with the comparative is rendered by one of the adverbs motto or nao; thus:

Mollo chōjō made noborimashō.

More sammit till will-probably-ascend.

("Let us go on still further, up to the very top."

Kono hō vea, nao yoroshiū This side as-for, still good ("This is a still gozaimasŭ.") better one." ¶ 216. "The" with the comparative repeated is rendered by hodo, lit. "amount," thus:

Mireba miru hodo, rippa "The longer I look As-I-look, look amount splendid at it, the more splendid it appears."

Takai tokoro hodo, kaze wo High place amount, wind(accus.)
atemasŭ.
amilies.

"The higher the situation, the windier it is."

¶ 217. "Very" (comparatively little used) is expressed by such words as hanahada, itatle, taisō (ni), or takŭsan. The word taihen (ni) resembles the "awfully" of English Colloquial parlance, and is in perpetual requisition. The following are a few examples:

Taisō ni kirci. "Very pretty."

Itatic muzukashi mon(o) \ "It is an extremely difficult da. (Or more politely, desŭ.) \ thing."

Hanahada o kinodokŭ "I am extremely sorry."
sama (de gozaimasŭ).

 $\left. egin{array}{ll} {\it Taihen} & {\it ni} & {\it omoshir} ar{\it o} \ {\it gozaimashĭta}. \end{array} ight.
ight.$

¶ 218. Another favourite phrase answering to our Colloquial "awfully" is the gerund of the adjective or verb, followed by the words shi-yō ga nai or shǐ-kala ga nai, which signify literally "there is nothing to be done," "there is not help for it," thus:

Atsŭkute shi-yō ga nai. "It is awfully hot."

Kŭlabirele shi-yō ga $\begin{cases} \text{``I am awfully tired,''} \text{ or ``I am so tired I don't know what to do.''} \end{cases}$

Taikutsu de shi-kata ga nai. "I am awfully bored."

 $N.\ B.$ Observe de in this last instance, where it replaces the gerund because taikutsu is not an adjective, but in reality a noun here used as a quasi-adjective.

The following expressions may serve to exemplify a kindred idiom answering to our "so" or "too:

Kurakŭte micnai. { "It is so dark, I can't see;" or "It is too dark to see."

Tokute arukemasen walk there;" or "It was too fai to walk."

Ano hito wa, baka de,
That person as-for, fool being,
Isikai-michi ga nai, employ-way (nom.) isn't.

"He is such a fool that it is impossible to make any use of him."

¶ 219. "Not very" is expressed by amari. "excess," "too," or yokci (ni) "superfluity," with a negative verb, thus:

 $A mari\ omoshiroku\ nai, \quad \text{(familiar)} \qquad \big\} \qquad \text{``It is not very} \\ A mari\ omoshiroku\ gozaimasen, \quad \text{(polite)} \ \big\} \ amusing. \text{``}$

Yokei gozaimasen. { "There are not very many," for "There is not very much."

Yokei ni mēkarımasen. ("There is not much money superfluously guins-not. (made."

CHAPTER VIII.

The Verb.

GENERAL CONSIDERATIONS.

- ¶ 220. The nature and functions of the Japanese verb differ considerably from those of the verbs of European languages. Conformably with the absence of number in the noun and of true personal pronouns, the Japanese verb entirely disregards all considerations of person and of number. am," "thou art," "he is," "she is," "it is," "we are," "you are," "they are," are all expressed by the same word da (familiar) or desŭ (polite). Similarly all the persons of the past tense ("I was," "thou wast," etc.) are expressed by the same word datta or deshita; all the persons of the probable present or future ("I probably am, or probably shall be," "thou probably art, or probably wilt be," etc.) by the same word darō or deshō. The present and past indicative can be used as adjectives (see ¶ 81 and ¶ 205), and even as nouns (see ¶ 45). Many of the moods are different from anything that exists in Europe. There are negative, potential, and causative conjugations, etc., etc. In fact, the whole verbal conception has been worked out in an alien manner.
- ¶ 221. Most of the Japanese verbal forms occurring in actual practice consist of four elements, viz., the root, the stem, the inflection or "base," and the agglutinated suffix or suffixes. Take, for instance, the word komarimashila, which is so often heard in conversation, and which signifies "(I) was in trouble," " was at a loss," "didn't know what to do." The root is kom, which we meet with in the small group of related verbs komu, "to stuff into," "to crowd into," "to inclose," "to confine;" komeru, synonymous or nearly so with komu; komoru, an intransitive verb signifying "to be in a state of confinement," "to be shut up." From the root kom is formed the stem komar by the agglutination of ar(u), "to be." To this is added the unexplained suffix i, which gives the "indefinite form" of the verb, a sort of participle or gerund (see ¶¶ 278-281 and ¶¶ 422-426), which can also be used as a "base" or foundation form, to which certain suffixes are agglutinated.* In this case the agglutinated suffixes are mashi, which originally signified "to be," and ta, the index of the past tense, itself shown, by reference to the Classical form of the language, to be a corruption of the gerundial suffix te and of aru, "to be." The single word komarimashila therefore contains the verb "to be" three times over.

^{*} It seems almost incredible that serious grammarians should ever have thought of applying the name of "root" to the indefinite form of the verb, which is as much an inflection of the stem (probably au ultimate analysis would prove the inflection to be an agglutinated form obtained from the stem) as any other. There is no more reason for calling komari a "root" than komaru or komare. But the unfortunate precedent set by Redriguez, and followed by Hoffmann, has been constantly adhered to by writers who have not taken the trouble to think out the subject for themselves. Hence we are treated to such sesquipedalian "roots" as arascrare (really the indefinite form of the potential of the causative conjugation of aru, "to be"), and we are told that such is the form from which all the other principal parts of the verb are derived! It would be about as reasonable to call "disregarding" the root of the verb "to disregard," and to say that "disregardest," "disregardeth," etc., are derived from it.

- ¶ 222. Again take samasanai, "(I) do not cool" (transitive). The root is sam or sab, which we find in sameru, "to cool" (intransitive), "to fade," "to wake;" in samui, "cold;" and in samushii or sabishii, "lonesome." The stem is samas, formed from the root sam and the verb suru, "to do," the second α apparently owing its existence to the "attraction" of the first (see \P 3). The third a is the inflection constituting the "negative base" samasa, to which is agglutinated the negative adjective nai, "non-existent," in order to form the certain present tense of the negative conjugation. In some cases—for instance in sameru, "to cool" (intransitive)—the stem (sam) is not a lengthened form of the root, but simply the root itself. In others again there is no agglutinated suffix, the base itself being used as an independent word. Of this the imperative of verbs of the first conjugation offers a good example.
- ¶ 223. Japanese roots form an obscure subject, and one into which it is not necessary for the beginner to plunge, as it has scarcely any practical utility. For practical purposes the stem (whether identical with the root, or a lengthened form of the root) may be accepted as an ultimate fact,—not indeed as a complete word, but as the unit to which the bases are attached. The stem itself should, theoretically speaking, always remain absolutely invariable. But we shall see later on how phonetic decay has caused all verbs of the first conjugation to depart from this standard in the modern Colloquial speech.
- ¶ 224. The "bases" are formed from the stem by the addition of one or more letters, whose origin is too obscure to discuss here. The bases are four in number, and all the other conjugational forms are obtained by agglutinating certain suffixes to them. Their names are the Certain ✓

Present, the Indefinite Form, the Conditional Base, and the Negative Base.* The Negative Base is never used as an independent word. The Conditional Base is, in the first conjugation, identical with the imperative. In the other conjugations it is not used as an independent word. The bases are not always formed in the same manner, nor are the suffixes always attached to them in quite the same manner. Hence the distribution of verbs into different conjugations. Of these there are in the Written Language four, but in the Colloquial only three, as the third and fourth have coalesced.

Observe how the letter r never enters into the formation of the bases of verbs of the 1st. conjugation, but always enters into the formation of those of the 2nd. and 3rd. conjugations. Of course r may appear in the stem of any verb, as it does in that of uru, "to sell," 1st. conj.

^{*} For the Certain Present, see ¶¶ 273 and 240; for the Indefinite Form, see ¶¶ 278 and 241; for the Conditional Base, see ¶ 252; and for the Negative Base, see \P 256.

[†] The stem—indeed the root—is really ot, as in the active verb otosu, "to drop" (1st. conj.). But the consonant t changes euphonically to ϵh before the vowel i (see p. 25).

- ¶ 226. Before proceeding to the more important matter of verbal paradigms, we may just mention in passing that, when naming Japanese verbs, it is usual to mention the present tense as in Greek, not the infinitive as in English, Latin, and host other European languages. Thus uru, "to sell;" yorokobu, "to be glad;" neru, "to sleep;" koshiracru, "to prepare;" ochiru, "to fall;" kiru, "to wear." But uru has not the infinitive signification of "to sell;" at least it has not generally or properly that signification. It means "I (or you, they, etc.) sell." Similarly in the case of all other verbs. The Japanese language has no form exactly answering in signification to our infinitive. The usual makeshift for an infinitive will be found mentioned in ¶ 277.
- ¶ 227. The following paradigms of the three regular conjugations and of the three most important irregular verbs, viz. kuru, "to come;" suru, "to do;" and masŭ, for which English has no equivalent, will serve to show how the various Japanese moods and tenses are formed by agglutinating suffixes to the bases. The memory will be assisted by noticing that almost all the tenses of the Positive Voice are obtained from the Indefinite Form and the Conditional Base, while those of the Negative Voice are obtained from the Negative Base and the Certain Present. Note further that the only difference between the second and third conjugation is that while the vowel e characterises the former, the vowel i characterises the latter. This fact has caused some European grammarians to class them together as a single conjugation (the second). They are thus classed in Mr. Aston's Grammar, and in Messrs. Satow and Ishibashi's excellent little "Dictionary of the Japanese Spoken Language.'

¶ 234. It will be found good practice to conjugate, according to the paradigms of the three regular conjugations, a few of the verbs in commonest use. Such are:

butsu, "to beat." komaru, { "to be in trouble." dasu, "to take out." nomu, "to drink." degree is ogu, to make haste." yobu, "to call." to be beaten." which is ogu, to hear." yobu, "to be beaten." to sleep." to sleep." to sleep." to sleep." to sleep." to be the control of the

¶ 235. As may be seen by the paradigms, the Japanese verbal forms are not numerous in comparison with those of French, Latin, and most other European tongues. But a peculiar difficulty arises from the fact that all verbs of the first conjugation are more or less anomalous. In the Classical language each suffix was simply agglutinated to one of the bases, without any letter-changes occurring, e.g., gerund oki-te, "having put;" ari-te, "having been; tsugi-te, "having joined." But in modern usage phonetic decay has obliterated this pristine simplicity, and has given us oite, atte, tsuide,—forms in which the stem loses its final consonant, and other letter-changes are apt to take place. The nature of the irregularity thus caused depends in every case upon the last letter of the stem. The student will more easily master this difficulty by committing to memory the following examples, than by being furnished with a set of abstract rules:—

- ¶ 237. It will be observed that most of the above letterchanges have ease of pronunciation for their sole efficient cause. Some, however, may appear strange; for instance, that affecting the stems in g, where d and j replace t and chin the terminations. The reason of this is that when the nigori'ed letter g* dropped out, there remained a feeling that the nigori should be marked in some other way. It was therefore carried on to the next syllable, converting plain t and ch into nigori'ed d and j. Had this not been done, many forms of such pairs of verbs as tsugu and tsuku would have become indistinguishable, - a disaster which has actually overtaken verbs with stems ending in b and m, and also those ending in a vowel, in r, and in t. Thus it is only by the context that we can tell whether yonde is to be understood as the gerund of yobu, "to call," or of yomu, "to read;" whether nutte is the gerund of nuu, "to sew," or of nuru, "to lacquer;" whether utte is the gerund of uru, "to sell," or of utsu, "to strike."

and the educated in Tōkyō sometimes follow their example, especially when speaking in public. But this sounds somewhat pedantic. The habit has arisen from the fact that in former days, when the Court resided at Kyōto, the dialect of that place was naturally esteemed above the vernacular of Eastern Japan. A similar case is offered by the verbs kariru, "to borrow;" tariru, "to suffice," and one or two others, which the genuine usage of Tōkyō inflects according to the third conjugation, but which public speakers sometimes make of the first conjugation (karu, taru, etc.), in imitation of the Kyōto dialect and of old Classical rules.

¶ 239. In the case of stems ending in s, the change of s into sh in the indefinite form is caused by the inability of the modern Japanese to sound an s before the vowel i. Originally nashi was probably nasi, and so in other cases.

The changes in the l series have their origin in a similar modern inability to pronounce that consonant before the vowels i and u. It is probable that, some centuries ago, people consistently said mati. mate. mata, "to wait:" matu. and the conditional and negative bases still retain the pronunciation which theoretical unity postulates, while the other two bases—matu and mati—have slid respectively into matsu and machi. All that we know for certain on this point is that the modern pronunciation was already established at the close of the sixteenth century, from which time the first Jesuit works on the language date. insertion of a w in the negative base of verbs ending in vowel stems (shimawa, iwa, omowa, nuwa) has its crigin in a curious phonetic change which took place many centuries ago. Originally the stem of all such verbs ended in an f. thus:

PRESENT. INDEF, FORM. CONDIT. BASE. NEG. BASE.

shimafu shimafi shimafe shimafa.

But according to a rule which permeates the whole vocabulary of the modern language, the f has been dropped before u, i, and e, and has been converted into a w before a, thus giving shimau, shimai, shimae, shimawa.

ANALYSIS OF THE FORMATION OF THE VARIOUS MOODS AND TENSES IN THE REGULAR VERBS.

- ¶ 240. Certain Present or Future (the 1st. base): to the stem add u for the 1st. conjugation, eru for the 2nd., and iru for the 3rd. The origin of these terminations is unknown.
 - N. B. In the Written Language, both eru and iru are replaced by uru, a peculiarity to be heard also from the lips of some speakers.
- ¶ 241. Indefinite Form (the 2nd. base): to the stem add i for the 1st. and 3rd. conjugations, and e for the 2nd. The origin of these terminations is unknown.
- ¶ 242. Desiderative Adjective: to the indefinite form add tai. Tai is an adjective originally identical with itai, "painful," and is capable of conjugation like other adjectives, according to the paradigms on pp. 126, 128, and 130, thus: okitaku, okitō gozaimasŭ, okitakereba, okitaku nai, etc.
- ¶ 243. Adjective of Probability: to the indefinite form add $s\tilde{o}$ na (see p. 137).
- ¶ 244. Polite Certain Present or Future: to the indefinite form add masŭ, which can itself be conjugated through most of the moods and tenses, thus: okimashŭa, okimashō, etc. (see p. 160).
- ¶ 245. Gerund (by some called the Past Participle): to the indefinite form add te, observing the rules of phonetic change in the 1st. conjugation (see p. 162). Te is supposed by the native grammarians to be a fragment of the verb

- hateru, "to finish." If this view is correct, oite, for instance, literally means "having finished putting," or "finishing putting." The next six tenses in the paradigm are all obtained by agglutinating other suffixes to the te of this one.
- ¶ 246. Gerund Emphasised: to the indefinite form add cha, observing the rules of phonetic change in the 1st. conjugation (see p. 162). Cha is a corruption of te wa, which latter original form is still mostly preferred by cultured speakers. Wa is the postposition treated of in pp. 85 et seq.
- ¶ 247. Certain Past: to the indefinite form add la, observing the rules of phonetic change in the 1st. conjugation (see p. 162). Ta is a corruption of the Classical past lari, itself derived from le ari (ari is the Classical "conclusive present" of aru, "to be"). Oila therefore etymologically means "am having finished putting."
- ¶ 248. Probable Past: to the indefinite form add $tar\bar{o}$, observing the rules of phonetic change in the 1st. conjugation (see p. 162). $Tar\bar{o}$ stands for te $ar\bar{o}$, lit. "probably shall be having finished."
- ¶ 249. Conditional Past: to the indefinite form add laraba or lara, observing the rules of phonetic change in the 1st. conjugation (see p. 162). Taraba stands for le araba, lit. "if am having finished," araba being a Classical form—the so-called "hypothetical mood"—of aru, "to be" (see ¶ 287, p. 184).
- ¶ 250. Concessive Past: to the indefinite form add taredomo or taredo, observing the rules of phonetic change in the 1st. conjugation (see p. 162). Taredomo stands for te aredomo, lit. "though am having finished." Aredomo, the concessive present of aru, "to be," is itself compounded of the conditional base are and the postpositions to and mo.

- ¶ 251. Frequentative Form: to the indefinite form add lari, observing the rules of phonetic change in the 1st. conjugation (see p. 162). Tari would seem to stand for te ari, in which case its original meaning is the same as that of the past indicative tense.
- ¶ 252. Conditional Base (the 3rd. base): to the stem add e for the 1st. conjugation, ere for the 2nd., and ire for the 3rd. The origin of these terminations is unknown. The name of "conditional base" was given to this form by Mr. Aston from one of its functions, that of serving as the basis on which the present conditional tense is built up. From it is also formed the concessive present.
- ¶ 253. Imperative: in the 1st. conjugation it is identical with the conditional base; in the 2nd. and 3rd. conjugations it is formed by adding to the indefinite form the syllable ro, which seems to be a corruption of yo, an exclamation resembling our word "oh!"
 - N. B. Some speakers drop the termination.—A familiar imperative, often used by members of the same household in addressing each other, is obtained by adding na to the indefinite form, as yobi-na! "call!" shi-na! "do!" It is uncertain whether this na be simply an interjection, or a corruption of the word nasai, "please." The former view is, however, the more probable.
- 254. Conditional Present: to the conditional base add ba, which is an irregularly nigori'ed form of the postposition wa.
- ¶ 255. Concessive Present: to the conditional base add domo or do. Do is the nigoried form of the postposition to, and mo is also one of the postpositions.
- ¶ 256. Negative Base (the 4th. base): in the 1st. conjugation add a to the stem; in the 2nd. and 3rd. conjugations the negative base is identical with the indefinite form.

The name of "negative base" was given to this form by Mr. Aston with reference to one of its functions, that o serving as the basis on which most of the tenses of the negative voice are built up. Note, however, that it likewise helps to form the probable present or future of the positive voice, together with all passives, potentials, and causatives. The name is, therefore, not a completely adequate one, though there is no harm in retaining it, provided the nature of the form itself be always borne in mind.

- ¶ 257. Probable Present or Future: in the 1st. conjugation add u to the negative base, and then contract the diphthong au thus obtained into \bar{o} . The termination u is a corruption of the unexplained Classical n. The steps of the process therefore are okan (the Classical probable present or future of oku), okau, oko. Rapid speakers sometimes go further still, and, shortening the o, say oko (retaining an emphasis on the final syllable). In the 2nd, and 3rd, conjugations the Classical language also simply adds n, thus: taben, "I shall probably eat;" ochin, "I shall probably fall" (not to be confounded with the negative present tabenu and ochinu). Some of the Colloquial dialects of the Western provinces vocalise this n into u exactly as in the 1st. conjugation, and say tabeu, ochiu. The Tokyo forms in yō, as tabeyō, ochiyō, are built on a false analogy suggested by the \bar{o} sound of the future in the 1st. conjugation.
- ¶ 258. Negative Imperative: to the present indicative add na, which is probably a fragment of nakare, the Classical imperative of the "negative adjective nai." (*Nakare=naku*¹ are², be² not-heing¹.)
- ¶ 259. Negative Probable Present or Future: in the 1st. conjugation add mai to the present indicative, in the and and 3rd. conjugations add it to the negative base. Mai is a corruption of maji, majiki, majiku, a Classical adjective expressing doubt or prohibition. In the Colloquial it has ceased to be conjugated.

- ¶ 260. Negative Certain Present or Future: to the negative base add n, which here and throughout the negative tenses is probably a corruption of the Classical negative particle ani, which exists likewise in Korean. The n should properly be followed by short ŭ, but this letter is now generally omitted in pronunciation.
- ¶ 261. Negative Certain Past: to the negative base add nanda, a termination of unknown origin.*
- ¶ 262. Negative Probable Past: to the negative base add $nandar\bar{o}$, formed from the negative certain past on the model of the same tense of the positive voice.
- ¶ 263. Negative Frequentative Form: to the negative add nandari, formed from the negative certain past on the model of the same tense of the positive voice.
- ¶ 264. Negative Conditional Present: to the negative base add neba. Ne is really a sort of negative conditional base formed on the analogy of the conditional base of the positive voice, and ba is the postposition wa with the nigori.
- ¶ 265. Negative Concessive Present: to the negative base add nedomo or nedo. For ne see the preceding paragraph. Do (for to) and mo are postpositions.
- ¶ 266. Negative Gerund: to the negative base add zu, a termination of doubtful origin. The postposition ni is often added to this form without affecting its signification, as tabezu ni for tabezu, "not eating," "without eating."

^{*} See, however, the present writer's "Essay in Aid of a Grammar of Luchuan," ¶ 124.

I 70 THE VERB.

- ¶ 267. Second Form of the Negative Voice: to the negative base add the "negative adjective nai" (see p. 129) in one or other of its conjugational forms.
 - N. B. In order to avoid tedious repetition, we leave the student to analyse for himself on the above model the conjugation of adjectives given on p. 128. A curious little item for him to notice is the occasional substitution of the Chinese negative prefix fu or bu for the negative Japanese negative suffixes. The use of this idiom implies, not simple negation, but the additional idea of badness, dereliction of duty, etc. Thus, fu-deki, "badly made;" fu-iki-todoki, "negligent;" bu-ashirai, "discourteous."

IRREGULAR VERBS.

- ¶ 268. Japanese has very few irregular verbs, and the irregularities even of these few are but slight. We have already given paradigms of the three chief ones, viz. kuru, "to come" (p. 158); suru, "to do" (p. 159); and masŭ (p. 160), which formerly meant "to be," but which is now used only as a termination that may be added to the indefinite form of any verb. With its aid there is obtained an honorific conjugation, which sounds more courteous than the ordinary conjugation and which is therefore in particularly frequent use. The plain verb without masŭ is apt to strike the ear as curt, especially at the end of a sentence. Instead of giving masŭ alone, the paradigm shows it attached to the verb nasaru, "to deign to do" (for nasaru see also below, ¶ 270 and ¶ 402).
- ¶ 269. The peculiarities of the other slightly irregular verbs are as follows:—Aru, "to be," when combined with the postposition de, loses its final syllable, making da instead of daru. It lacks the desiderative adjective. Its negative voice likewise is not used, being replaced by the "negative adjective nai. The improbable present or future arumai alone remains, used concurrently with nakarō.

- ¶ 270. Gozaru, "to be," in the mouths of most Tōkyō speakers, drops the r of its last syllable when masŭ is suffixed; thus gozaimasŭ for gozarimasŭ (but see end of ¶ 388). The same is the case with the polite verbs irassharu, "to go," "to come;" kudasaru, "to condescend;" nasaru, "to deign to do; and ossharu, "to deign to say." These latter verbs also use the forms thus obtained, viz. irasshai, kudasai, and nasai, as imperatives, in lieu of the older iraserare, kudasare, and nasare. But osshai is rare, osshaimashi being preferred. Another peculiarity of these four verbs is that, though now conjugated according to the 1st. conj., they are corruptions of verbs originally belonging to the 2nd, viz. iraserareru, kudasareru, nasareru, and oserareru, -properly potential forms which early assumed an honorific meaning (conf. ¶ 403). Kureru, "to give," 2nd. conj., follows their example, having the imperative kurei for kurero. Moreover, irassharu, kudasaru, and nasaru may drop the letter a of the termination aru in the gerund and in the six following tenses, thus: irashtte for irasshatte, kudasttarō for kudasattarō, nasttara for nasattara. In familiar conversation gozaimasŭ is often shorn of all its middle letters, and pronounced gozasu, gasu, or gesu. Similarly gozaimashita becomes gashita, etc. When the particle de precedes it, gozaimasŭ is apt to lose its initial letter as well, de gozaimasŭ being fused into desŭ, de gozaimashĭta into deshĭta, etc.
- ¶ 271. Iku, "to go," instead of the gerund iite, the emphasised gerund iicha, etc., which would be required by the rule for verbs of the first conjugation with stem ending in k (see p. 162), shows the following irregular forms:

Gerund "having gone, going." itte. Emphatic Gerund itcha. "having gone, going." "I went." Certain Past itta. Probable Past "I probably went." ittarō, Condit. Past ittara(ba), "if I had gone." Concess, Past ittaredo(mo). "though I went." Frequent, Form "sometimes going." ittari,

These irregular forms of iku coincide with the regular forms of the same tenses of the verb iu, "to say." Otherwise the verb iku is conjugated regularly.

¶ 272. Shinuru, "to die," is conjugated regularly through most of the moods and tenses, as if it were shinu (stem shin), and belonged to the first conjugation. But the addition of the syllable ru makes its certain present shinuru, and also the negative imperative shinuru-na, irregular. It has, moreover, inherited from the Classical Language a conditional base shinure, which occasionally replaces the regular shine. Altogether it appears as a sort of hybrid between the first conjugation and the third.*

REMARKS ON THE USE OF THE MOODS AND TENSES.

¶ 273. Present, Future, and Past.—The Japanese verb does not, like ours, clearly distinguish present from future time. It has one form serving to denote any certain action or state, whether present, future, or habitual, and another serving to denote any merely probable action or state, whether present or future. It is the question of certainty or uncertainty that forms the criterion, not the question of time. Still, as future actions and events must, in the nature of things, be more often uncertain than present actions and events, the form denoting certainty is applied in the majority of cases to present time, while the form denoting mere probability is applied in the majority of cases to future time. This it is which has led most writers on Japanese grammar to term the former the present tense, and the latter the future tense. But such a terminology is really incorrect, and it has been the cause of much misunderstanding between Europeans and natives.

In this last case there is little difference in English between "I think I won't," and plain "I won't." The former is less abrupt; that is all. Similarly in Japanese, where consequently the merely probable present or future tense sometimes comes in a roundabout way to correspond exactly to our real future. Thus:

Isoide ikō.

Having-hastened, will-probably-go.
(More politely, /soide ikimashō.)

"I will go quickly," or will make haste and go."

But it would do equally well to use the present, and to say Isoide ikimasŭ.—See also \P zg1.

¶ 273. A. The essence of the probable present or future in Japanese being uncertainty with a strong tinge of probability, this tense is often used to express a guess, such as English idiom generally conveys by means of the word "may" or "must," thus:

 $S\bar{o}$ omou mono mo ar \bar{o} so think persons also may-be ga...although.....

Sazo go fu-jiyū Indeed august inconventence "You must find it very de gozaimashō.
mrobubly is.

N. B. Needless to say that this idiom cannot be used to express our very different "must" denoting necessity. The "must" of necessity is rendered by a double negative, thus:

Harawanakereba narimasen.

If-pay-not, won't-be.

"If won't do not to pay, i.e.
"You must pay."

Englishmen knowing a little Japanese are apt to use this double negative too freely, because in English we habitually scatter must's broadcast, even where no real necessity is implied, as, when rising to take leave, we say "I am afraid I must be going." A Japanese would say $M\bar{o}$ o itoma itashimasŭ, lit. "Already I will do honourable leave."

¶ 273. B. Both the certain and the probable present must, in many cases, be translated by our conditional mood, thus:—

Mayoimasŭ nê! { "Indeed I shouldn't know what to do."

Tōkyō no hǐto wa, nan ("What would Tōkyō Tōkyō 's person us-for, what people say, I wonder? (e.g. to iimashō?) if told of the dearness of that will-probably-say? living in America.)"

Kimo wo tsubushimasu. { "They would be per-Liver (accus.) (they)will-burst. { feetly astounded."

- N. B. "I wonder," in the second of these instances, is intended to represent the shade of uncertainty inherent in the Probable Present iimashō. Japanese possesses no actual equivalent of our useful verb "to wonder."
- ¶ 274. The difference between the certain past and the probable past is precisely analogous to that between the certain present or future and the probable present or Future:—

Kimo tsubushimashita.

Liver (he) burst.

* "He was astounded."

Kimo tsubushimashĭtarō. { "He must have been astounded."

Needless to dwell further on this point after the copious illustrations in the preceding paragraph. The student will be more perplexed by certain anomalous uses of the certain past itself. Thus this tense is sometimes used where English idiom would prefer the present, for instance: Arimashīta (lit. "has been"), "Here it is!" said when one finds something which had been lost; Wakarimashīta, "I have understood," i.e., "I understand;" Gozen ga dekimashīta (lit. "dinner has forthcome"), "Dinner is ready;" Nodo ga kawakimashīta (lit. "throat has dried"), "My throat is dry," i.e., "I am thirsty." Contrariwise the Japanese often use the present—especially the present of the negative—where strict logic demands the past, thus:

Watakŭshi wa Amerika ni Me as-for, America in oru aida. dwell white.

While I was in

Narawanai kara, dekimasen. { "I can't do it, because Learn-not because, fortheomes-not. { I haven't learnt how."

¶ 275. In such an example as the following, the Japanese may seem illogical in using the past tense. But the English are equally illogical in using the present, seeing that the time referred to is future:

Shitaku no dekita toki,

Breparation's has-forthcome time,
shirashite o kun nasai, informing honourably give deign.

"Let me know when everything is ready."
(Said to an inferior.)

In the following example (and many similar ones might be quoted) the two languages play still more strangely at cross purposes, English using the past where Japanese has the future, and the present infinitive where Japanese has the past:

Kō shǐta hō ga Thus have-done side (nom.) it in this way," or "I think you yokarō. ought to do it like this." will-probably-bc-good.

N. B. Observe the phrase...hō ga yoi equivalent to our "should," "ought," "had better," and compare the foot-note to p. 144.

Somewhat similar are instances like the following, where the past tense (especially the past tense of adjectives) has the sense of our conditional:

Massugu ga chikakatta. { "It would have been straight (nom.) was-near. { shorter to go straight on."

Sō suru to yokatta. { "It would have been so do if, was-good. } better to do that."

- N. B. If we were to use the bookish English idiom "it had been shorter," "it had been better," we should obtain a close approximation to the Japanese expression. Compare also last part of \P 287.
- ¶ 276. Notwithstanding the occasional appearance of such cases as those hitherto exemplified, the use of the present and past generally gives no trouble, thus:

Tsune ni iu koto desŭ ka ? ("Is it a thing people Generally say thing is ? (generally say?"

Ano hito wa ki-yō da can do anything."

That person as-for, handy is kara, nan de mo shimasi.

(Be careful to pronounce ki-yō east two syllables. Kyō, as one because, anything-whatever does. syllable, means "to-day.")

Uchi no shafu wa, House 's jinrikisha-man as-for, ashi wo itamemashita kara, foot (accus.) has-hurt(trans.) because, man has hurt his foot, no otoko kawari exchange yonde mairimashita. having-called have-come.

"As the house jinrikishawo (I have called another (accus.) instead."

¶ 277. The certain present and certain past, sometimes followed by the word koto, "thing," "act," "fact," to some extent replace the infinitive, a mood for which the Japanese language lacks a special form. Thus oku koto, "to put" in general; oita koto, "to have put" in the past:—

¶ 278. Indefinite Form, Gerund, and Emphasised Gerund.—
The indefinite form of Japanese verbs is one to which there is nothing that exactly corresponds in our Western tongues. It is by itself of no tense and mood, but may denote any tense or mood according to the context. The rule regarding its use in the Written Language is as follows:—

When several clauses are correlated, that is to say, follow each other and express the same tense or mood, then only the verb or adjective of the last of such correlated clauses takes the termination which indicates the tense or mood intended by the speaker, the verbs or adjectives of all the foregoing clauses being put in the indefinite form. One thus has to wait till the end of the last clause before one can tell whether the writer intends to refer to the past, present, or future, to the indicative, conditional, imperative, etc. The final verb or adjective, so to speak, focuses and clinches all that went before. Thus the Shintō theologian Hirata, when insisting on the inscrutableness of the divine nature, says:

Kami 20 210 wa, Gods of august surface midari ni hakari-iu-beki mono calculate-say-should thing de wa nai. Tada sono tattoki is-not. Simply their venerableness tattobi, kashikoki 200 (accus.) to-venerate, awfulness (accus.) kashikomi. osoru-beki 7810 to-reverence. fearfulness (accus.) osoreru hoka nashi. to-fcar besides is-not.

"The nature of the gods is not a thing which men should rashly speculate and talk about.
There is nothing else for us to do but to honour their greatness, to reverence their majesty, and to fear their power."

In this passage tattobi and kashikomi, the indefinite forms forms of the verbs tattobu and kashikomu, must be rendered by our infinitive mood, because they are correlated with osoreru, which is in the certain present tense, here corresponding to what we term the infinitive (conf. ¶ 277). Note also the use of the bookish form in ki (see ¶¶ 177 and 178) of the attributive adjectives tattoki and kashikoki (for tattoi and kashikoi), here—as generally in the higher style—employed in preference to the abstract substantives in sa, such as tattosa, kashikosa.

¶ 279. In the negative voice, the place of the indefinite form is supplied by the negative gerund, thus:

kuni-guni countries uchi ni wa. sōmoku middle in. herbs-trees mo haezu, jimbutsu also grow-not, human-beings nai tokoro ga also exist-not places (nom.)arimasu.

"Among the various countries in the world, there are some where no plants or trees grow, and where no human beings live."

(N. B. Haezu is the negative gerund of haeru, "to sprout," correlated with the present of the negative adjective nai.)

¶ 280. In the Book Language the foregoing rule concerning the use of the indefinite form is exemplified at every turn. It is also followed pretty frequently in set speeches, and sometimes even in the ordinary conversation of careful and cultured speakers. Foreign students should, therefore, not fail to make themselves acquainted with it. At the same time, it must be admitted that the familiar and lower styles of Colloquial almost completely disregard it. Sometimes it is replaced, as in European languages, by two or more clauses in the same tense. But more frequently the indefinite form gives way to the gerund, so that, for instance, the last example but one, if made genuinely conversational, would run thus:

Kami koto voa, midari ni suiryō Gods matters as-for, rashly speculation as-for. tattoi tokoro dekimasen. Tada wo tattonde. 50120 Simply their venerable place (accus.) venerating. uya-uyashii tokoro wo uyamatte, sono osoroshii their unve-inspiring place (uccus.) reverencing, their fearful tokoro wo osoreru yori hoka wa place (accus.) to-fear than besides as-for, is-not.

- N. B. Notice the word tokoro, "place," used as a sort of suffix to the adjective tattoi, "venerable," to express the abstract quality of "venerableness," and similarly in connection with the adjectives of the other clauses.
- ¶ 281. Hardly a sentence—especially a sentence of any length—can be uttered without the gerund being thus used. Take, for instance, the following:

Haya-tsüke-gi 700
Quick-strike-wood (accus.)
motte koi!
having-carried come!

We Bring some matches!

(More lit. "Having carried matches, come!")
```

Kikashite kudasai! "Please tell me."

Uchi ni ite, hon de mo House in being, books even mite orimashō.
looking-at (1) shall-probably-be.

Kaeri-gake ni kwankōba Returning-while in, bazaar votte. sŭkoshi kaive stopping. u-little 22222kimamono ehuses having-done, (I) haveshita. come.

hiru-gozen 200 Yesterday midday-meal (accus.) tabete. uchi 200 having-eaten, house (accus.) demashite. kara sore having-gone-out. from sumō mite, 200 wrestling (accus.) huving-seen, han-nichi asunde kihalf-day having-played mashita. have-come.

- "I think I will stay at home and read." (More lit. "Staying at home, I shall probably be looking at books.")
- ("On my way home, I looked in at the bazaar, and made a few purchases." (More lit. "Having stopped at the bazaar, and having made some purchases, I have come home again.")
- "I went out yesterday after luncheon, was present at a wrestling match, and was away half the day." (More lit. "Having eaten luncheon, having gone out, then having looked at wrestling, having played half the day, I have come.")

¶ 282. Sometimes the gerund expresses instrumentality rather than correlation, thus:

Susugi-sentaku 200 Rinse-washing (accus.) "She gains her livelishite. kurashi 200 hood by washing clothes." livelihood doing. (accus.) orimasŭ. tsükete affixing is.

¶ 283. The gerund of adjectives occurs most frequently in phrases where English idiom employs the word "so," for instance:

Kurakule miemasen. } "It is so dark, I can't see."

Itakŭte shiyō ga nai. don't know what to Being-painful, way-to-do (nom.) isn't do," or "It is awfully painful." (Conf. \ 218.)

Occasionally the gerund of verbs is employed in the same manner, to help to express the meaning conveyed by our word "so," thus:

Ashi ga hiele Feet (nom.) being-cold, tamaranai.
(I) cannot-endure.

(I) what to do."

¶ 284. The Emphasised Gerunds oicha, tabecha, ochicha, shicha, are somewhat vulgar, or at least familiar, and cultured speakers still prefer the uncontracted forms oile wa, tabete wa, ochite wa, etc.

Necha inai. { "Oh! no; he is as-for-sleeping-indeed, isn't. } not asleep."

Matcha oraremasen, As-for-waiting-indeed, cannot-be.

"I can't wait.

Itcha $d\bar{v}$ $da\ r^2$ As-for-going-indeed, how is (it)?

{ "What do you say to our going there?"

Sō shicha komarimasŭ. So doing-indeed, will be-troubled.

("Annoyance will be caused if you do that."

So shicha ikemasen. to do that," or "You mustn't do that."

Ko shinakucha narimasen. ("It won't do not to do this," i.e., "You must do this."

Ki wo otoshicha spirit (accus.) tetting-full as-for, ikemasen. is-no-go.

''You mustn't let your spirits droop."

- N. B. The last three examples illustrate what has already been said in the Note at top of p. 175 concerning the rendering of our word "must" by a double negative in Japanese, while also showing that "must not" is rendered by a single negative. Observe, moreover, the general tendency to use the emphatic gerund chiefly in phrases expressing negation, interrogation, or something disagreeable.
- ¶ 285. Desiderative Adjective and Adjective of Probability.—
 The use of these forms may be best understood from a few examples:

\ ''Something should like to see." Mitai mono. Want-to-see thing. "I want to see Sono mitai. mono zvo thing (accus.) want-to-see. I that " That ("I want to negaitö Chotto gozaimasŭ. Slightly wanting-to-beg lyou a slight favour." "Something which Arisō na koto. is likely to happen." Likely-to-be fuct. "Something which Arisō koto. 1120 nai Likely-to-be also isn'tfuet. lisn't likely to happen." "It looks as if the ga agarisō desū. (Ame(nom.) likely-to-rise is. Irain would clear off." desŭ. (from the adjective oishii, "good to eat.") Oishisō "It looks good." Likely-to-be-nice is (e.g. a cake.)

¶ 286. Besides this "adjective of probability" obtained by agglutinating $s\bar{o}$ to the indefinite form, there is an idiom formed by using $s\bar{o}$ after the present or past tense. $S\bar{o}$, which is then best written as a separate word, has the force of "it would seem that," "they say that":—

0 ide ni "It would se that he is coming." Honourable. exit to $s\bar{o}$ desu. appearance is. Ano vado-va wa, has-burnt that hotel has burnt hotel That as-for, sō desu. appearance is. ii Taisō ni Greatly good appearance

¶ 287. Conditional Present and Past.—These tenses have a somewhat peculiar history. In the Classical form of the language there is what is called a "hypothetical present and past," thus:

Condit. Pres., okeba, "when I put, "as I put;" tabureba, "when I eat," as I eat.

Condit. Past, okitareba, "when (or as) I had put; "tabe-tareba, "when (or as) I had eaten.'

Hypoth. Pres., okaba, "if I put;" tabeba, "if I eat."
Hypoth. Past, okidaraba, "if I had put; tabelaraba, "if I had eaten."

The hypothetical present, it will be noticed, was formed by suffixing ba to the negative base. All four forms may still be met with in the so-called Colloquial of certain books. But in actual Colloquial practice the distinction between hypothetical and conditional has been given up, and the sense of "when' is generally expressed by a periphrasis with the word toki, lit. "time, as kuru toki, when he comes." The curious thing is that what have survived are the present tense of the old conditional mood, and the past tense of the old hypothetical. The single Colloquial mood thus pieced together from the halves of the two

Classical moods might perhaps better be termed the hypothetical, as it has the sense of "if......" But we have preferred the name of conditional as being more familiar to European ears, and as having been employed by other writers on Japanese Grammar. The only present tense hypothetical forms that have remained in common use are ivaba, from iu, "to say," which is employed in the sense of "so to say," and naraba, from naru, a Classical verb meaning "to be," and not to be confounded with the naru which means "to become." Naraba therefore properly signifies "if it be;" but when employed as an auxiliary attached to other verbs, it comes to mean no more than "if." Thus iku naraba is "if I go." Naraba is often clipped of its last syllable, and becomes nara:—

Dekitara(ba), motte
If-has-forthcome, carrying kite kudasai.
coming condescend.

"Please bring it with you if it is ready."

O iriyō naraba, Honourably requisite if-is,

Kō sureba. dekiru (no) ni... "You could do it Thus if-do, forthcomes whereas... or, with a stronger tinge of blame, in this way if you tried mono (but you haven't tried. $K \tilde{o}$ sureba. dekiru thing although you ought to Thus if-do. forthcomes have done so)." 700 (accus.)....

These last three examples are specially important as illustrating a whole class of elliptical idioms with which Colloquial Japanese abounds, and by which our "I would if I could," "I should, had I been able," etc., etc., are expressed. It is true that the qualifying particles (ga, ni, no ni, mono wo) are sometimes absent; but they are generally there, and the sentence remains unfinished. After all, there is nothing to be astonished at in this. From the point of view of logic, a conditional sentence is always incomplete. For instance, when we say "I should like to travel," the implied rider is "but I cannot," or "I cannot yet," or some such clause. Compare also the words within parenthesis in the examples under discussion. Observe that ni final implies regret or reproach, while no ni superadds to this a further shade of meaning, showing that the thing to be done is either something concerning which a command had previously been given, or else that it is a point of duty, or that it refers to some other circumstance known to both speaker and doer. Mono zvo is more emphatic still. It lays still greater stress on the failure to perform the desired action, and often alludes to some accident or misfortune as the cause of such failure.

¶ 288. Concessive Present and Past.—The peculiar force of these forms corresponds most nearly to that of our word "though," but is generally best rendered in practice by prefixing "but" to the following clause. The orthodox concessive forms given in the paradigms are not often heard in actual practice, being mostly replaced by the independent word keredo (mo), "though," itself of verbal origin, construed with the present or past indicative, thus:

Iya da keredo, shi-kata Distasteful is though, way-to-do ga nai.
(nom.) isn't. (familiar)

"It is distasteful to me, but I can't help myself."

Ii keredo, ne ga takai. "The article is a good Good though, price (nom.) (is) high. one, but it is too dear."

Sagashita keredomo, shi-Sought though, canremasen.

not-know.

I have looked for it,
but can't find it."

Sometimes, instead of keredomo or keredo, we hear the longer periphrasis to wa iedo(mo), lit. "though one says that." Thus oitaredo(mo), oita keredo(mo), and oita to wa iedo(mo) are all synonymous and equally correct.

¶ 289. A well-marked shade of meaning distinguishes the concessive mood proper from expressions closely resembling it in....te mo, de mo and to mo. Thus attaredomo, atta keredo, or atta to wa iedo signifies "though there was," "though there has been," whereas atta¹ to² itte³ mo⁴ (lit. "even⁴ saying₃ that² there was¹) signifies "though there may (or might) have been," and aru to mo signifies "though there be." The former set of idioms serves to state facts, the latter to hazard suppositions:—

Karinakute mo tarimasu. Karinai de mo tarimasu. Borrowing-not even, suffices.

Miru mo iya desŭ. 'I can't bear even to see or Miru no mo iya desŭ. it."

Iku to mo, yosu to mo, Go whether, abstain whether,
go tsugō shidai ni august convenience according to,
deign.

The to mo, yosu to mo,
whether,
there is the to go or to stay."

Iwanakue mo shitteru. ("I know it without your saying-not even, knowing-am. (telling me."

.V. B. Shitteru stands for shitte iru. See end of ¶ 294.

Utchatte mo yoroshii. done, even if you throw it away." I.e., "You may throw it away."

Sonna ni yoku nakute mo
Thus good not-being even.

''You need not use such yoroshii.

(is) good.

.V. B. These examples suggest the manner in which some of our idioms with "may," "need," and "without" are to be rendered in Japanese.

We have already noticed in ¶ 118 (p. 83) the force, not unlike that of the concessive mood, often inherent in the postposition tote. Here is another example:

Seijin-tachi ga donna Sages (nom.) in-what ni yotte kangacha tote, way assembling reflected even-if,
shire ya shinai.

able-to-know as-for, do-not.

That can never be known, however much the philosophers may put their heads together."

¶ 290. Frequentative Form.—Frequentatives are almost always used in pairs, the second member of the pair being generally followed by the verb suru, "to do." The fundamental force of this tense is either to show that the action denoted by the verb is occasional, or else to imply the alternation or opposition of two different actions. The English translation must vary according to circumstances:—

Kitari konakattari Sometimes-coming sometimes-not-coming shimasii

"Sometimes comes, and sometimes he doesn't."

does.

Naitari warattari. Sometimes-crying ō-sawagi desŭ. great-hubbub (it) is.

"There is a great sometimes-laughing, scene going on,—tears and laughter turn and turn about."

warukŭte, ("I feel so un-Kagen being-bad, well that I divide Bodily-state (nom.) my time between netari sometimes-getting-up getting up and sometimes-lying-down shite orimasii. lying down doing am.

- ¶ 291. The Imperative occurs in military words of command, such as tomare ! " halt !" and yasume ! " stand at ease !" But in social intercourse, even with the lowest classes, it sounds rude, and is therefore rarely employed except in the case of a few honorific verbs, for instance asobase, "be pleased to do." An honorific periphrasis is mostly preferred, even when addressing an inferior, as will be explained in ¶ 409. It is to that paragraph that the student should devote his attention.
 - N. B. Observe, however, the idiomatic use of the imperative in such phrases as Nani shiro! or nani itase! "do what you may!" "act as one will!" Conf. also end of ¶ 186.

A noteworthy idiom, by means of which the English first person plural of the imperative ("let us....") may generally be rendered, is shown in the following examples:-

\ "Let us do it in this way." \ (familiar) Kō shiyō ja nai ka? Thus will-do isn't ?

"Let us go and see the Flower-seeing to (cherry, etc.) arimasen ka ? is-not

Or else the future alone (without ja nai ka, etc.) may be employed. For instance, Isoide ikō may signify, not only "I will make haste to be off," but "Let us make haste to be off."

AUXILIARY VERBS.

¶ 292. Properly speaking, several of the suffixes helping to form the moods and tenses are auxiliary verbs which were once independent, some of which are indeed still independent in other positions. Thus, when we make use of the common phrase yoku nemashita, "I have slept well," the polite suffix mashi originally meant "to be," and the past termination ta (for to aru) means "am having finished," as explained in ¶ 247 and ¶ 245. The whole word nemashita, resolved into its constituent parts, therefore signifies "am having finished being asleep." Many verbal stems, too, have been built up by means of the verbs aru, "to be," and eru, "to get," as:

atsumaru, "to collect" (intr.); atsumeru, "to collect" (trans.); suwaru, "to squat;" sueru, "to set."

N. B. Uneducated persons use such forms in aru unnecessarily when they say, for instance, narabaru, "to be in a row;" akatte imasŭ, "it is open." The simpler forms narabu and aite imasŭ are the correct ones.

¶ 293. More modern, and still felt to be separate and independent words, are the following auxiliaries:

Aru, "to be," which is often construed with the gerund of an active verb, to give a sense which we should render by a passive idiom, thus:

Muzukashiku kaite aru " It is written in too difficult Difficultly writing is . ni a hand for me to be able to zvatakŭshi-domo kara. to read it." (More lit. "It is in such because. the-likes-of-me difficult writing that," etc.) wa, yomemasen. as-for, is-unreadable.

Furoshiki ni tsutsunde Cloth-wrapper in having-wrapped arimasi.

is

"It is wrapped up in a cloth." (More lit. It is in a state of wrapped-up-ness in a cloth.")

N. B. The corresponding active phrases "is writing," "is wrapping up," etc., would be rendered by kaite iru or oru, tsutsunde iru or oru, as explained in ¶ 294. Notice, moreover, that these quasi-passive idioms with aru always denote something which is done already, not something which is being done, that is to say that they are never what English grammarians term "continuative tenses." They are also rather intransitive in intention than properly passive.

The most frequent use of aru as an auxiliary is to form compound equivalents for the probable present or future, and for several of the tenses of the negative voice, thus:

Kuru de arō or kuru darō, for koyō, "will probably come."

Konai de atta or konaidatta, for konakatta, "did not come."

Konai de attarō or konai dattarō, for konakattarō, "has probably not come."

For darō, datta, etc., may be substituted their polite equivalents deshō, deshǐta, etc., already mentioned on p. 171, thus: kuru deshō, konai deshǐta, konai deshǐtarō. Notice that the compound future expresses a somewhat stronger shade of doubt than the simple future. Aru is also replaced by the politer gozaru in such phrases as naorimashǐte gozaimasǔ, for naorimashǐta, "He has got well again." The lower classes, too, when addressing their superiors, frequently use the periphrasis gozaimasen de gozaimasǔ in lieu of simple gozaimasen, "there is not."

¶ 294. Iru and oru, "to be," construed with the gerund, form continuative tenses corresponding to such English expressions as "I am reading," "I was writing," "I shall be working," etc., thus:

Nani wo shite imasii ? "What is he doing? What (accus.) doing is? Mada nete orimasŭ. "He is still sleeping." Still sleeping "He is not likely to be Necha imasumai. Sleeping-as-for, probably-is-not. \ sleeping." (emphatic gerund) kara kumotte This-morning since, clouding orimashita ga, tōtō ame ni over (or cloudy) since the had-been whereas, finally rain to morning, and now at last it kimashita.

having-become has-come.

"It has been clouding has come on to rain."

Ei no ichi-ri to, Nihon England's one-mile and, Japanese Which do you think is no ichi-ri to, dochira ga the longer, an English mile 's one-league and, which (nom.) or a Japanese ri? nobite imashō? extending probably-is?

Kite orimasŭ. Having-come is.

{ "He is having come." i.e., "He has come."

In such an instance as the last, the simple past kimashita would be less clear; for it might only mean that the man had come and had gone away again, whereas kite orimasii can only mean that he has come and is still there.

Sometimes we must translate such sentences by the English passive, Japanese idiom almost invariably preferring the neuter, thus:

Madu dekite imasen ka? { "Isn't it finished yet?" still forthcoming is-not ?

Very often the word iru, "to be," loses its initial i after the gerund, especially in the present tense, and we hear neteru for nete iru, "is sleeping;" kaiteru for kaite iru, "is written" (lit. "is writing"), etc. This is a good example of the tendency of the Japanese language to turn independent words into agglutinated suffixes. In very vulgar parlance the particle wa, used with an exclamatory force, often coalesces with a preceding iru. Thus naile irā! "oh! he is crying." Such expressions are to be carefully avoided.

- N. B. Observe, too, that iru is often politely replaced by irassharu.
- ¶ 295. Kuru, "to come," construed with the gerund, forms what grammarians of certain other eastern Asiatic languages have termed "illative" tenses,—" illative" because they superadd to the main idea the subsidiary idea of motion towards the speaker or the person addressed, thus:

Kippu 700 katte Ticket (accus.) having-bought kimashō.
will-come.

I will go and buy a

Omoshiror koto veo itte
Amusing thing(accus.)saying '' He has told us a funny kita, story."

- N. B. Observe how English sometimes exactly reverses the Japanese idiom, using "to go" where Japanese has "to come." In other cases, as in the last of the above examples, the word "come" must simply be omitted in English as superfluous.
- ¶ 296. Miru, "to see," construed with the gerund, shows that an action is to be attempted, but without any very great effort,—that it is to be, as the slang phrase has it, just taken a shot at:

Yatte mimashō. (from yaru,) { "I will just try my hand at it."

Kiile miru ga ii. } "You had better Asking to-see (nom.) is-good. } enquire."

Nete mile mo neraremasen steeping trying even, could-not-sleep ap, but couldn't."

(it) neas.

- ¶ 297. Nara(ba), "if it be," serves to form a compound conditional (see p. 185).
- \P 289. Oku, "to put," construed with the gerund, indicates the full and complete settling of a matter, thus:

Kippu wo katte Ticket (accus.) having-bought "I have got my ticket okimashita.
have-put.

Kangacle oile kudasaı. ("Please think the matter Reflecting putting condescend. (vvell over."

Techō ni tsŭkete Note-book in having-fixed okimashō. will-probably-put.

"I think I will put it down in my note-book (so as to be sure to remember it)."

Sore made no koto ni shite
That till 's thing to doing oku hoka, shi-kata ga to-put besides, way-to-do (nom.)
nai.
is-not.

There is nothing for it but to let the matter rest there."

Atsuraete oita.

Having-ordered have-put.
(More politely okimas/ita).

"I have ordered it (at a shop").

N. B. The word oita in this last example shows that the speaker thinks that the order will be satisfactorily executed. Atsuraete kita would mean that one had just come from leaving the order with the shopman.

Oku suffixed often causes e final of the preceding gerund to be clipped in hurried speech,—atsuraete oita, for instance, becoming atsuraet'oita.

¶ 299. Shimau, "to finish," construed with the gerund, expresses the completion of an action, thus:

Isha sama ni natte

Physician Mr. to having-become a doctor." (after having had several other professions in view) has-finished.

Motte itte
Having-carried having-gone shimaimashita.
has-finished.

itte
having-gone '' He has carried it off."

Utchatte shimaimashō. ("I think I will throw it Throwing-away (I)-will-finish. (away."

Tōtō hom-buri ni natte
At-last main-falling to having-become shimaimashita.

has-finished.

Tōtō hom-buri ni natte
''It has ended by turning into a regular wet day."

N. B. "Main-falling," in this last example, having been supposed by some students of the first edition to be a misprint for "rain-falling," it may be well to point out that hon, "main (rain)," is here antithetical to "occasional (rain)," or what we should call "a shower," Jap. yūdachi.

Beginners might easily be led into misapprehension by attributing to shimau an independent force, instead of looking on it as a simple auxiliary to the verb which precedes it. This point requires attention. Thus nete shimatla does not mean "He has finished sleeping," but rather "He has finished by sleeping," or more simply "He has gone to sleep." Dete shimaimashita does not mean "He has finished going out," but "He has gone out."

¶ 300. The negative present of suru or itasu, "to do," construed with the indefinite form of any verb and the postposition zva, forms an emphatic equivalent for the negative present of that verb. In such contexts zva is generally pronounced ya in familiar intercourse (conf. p. 88):

```
Ari wa shimasen. (polite)
Ari ya shinai. (familiar)

"There isn't any."
```

Sonna kolo wa, ii

Such thing as-for, saying ''I should never dream of ya ilashimasen.

as-for, (I) do-not-do.

Saying such a thing."

 $M\bar{o}$ ki ya ilashimasen. ("I am sure he won't -1guin eoming as-for, $(h\epsilon)$ will not-do. come again."

When two such clauses are co-ordinated, mo replaces wa in both, thus;

Mi mo shinai, kiki mo seeing eren do-not, hearing eren "I neither saw nor shinai. heard anything."

The first of two clauses thus co-ordinated is often put in the conditional, strange as such a construction may seem to European ideas. Thus the last example might equally well read thus: Mi mo shinakereba, kiki mo shinai. Indeed this last would be the most strictly grammatical manner of expressing the idea; for the two clauses would then be correlated syntactically, according to the rule explained in ¶¶ 278—279 (pp. 178-9), sezu being the negative gerund of suru, "to do."

¶ 301. Yaru, "to send," "to give," construed with the gerund, often helps to form a periphrasis for the simple verb when that verb is a transitive one, the periphrasis always retaining something of the idea of "giving," as in the following examples:

Dashite yaru, or dasi. "To put outside."

Butte yarimashō. "I will give him a beating." (Buchimashō would be simply "I will beat him.") yarimasŭ. ("I am going to give the dog his liberty (by untying him)." Torre (accus.) loosening Dog

(Inu wo tokimasŭ would be simply "I am going to untie the dog.") koshiraesasete by, causing-to-prepare carpenter make Carpenter varimashō. (\tilde{I}) will-probably-give.

"I think I will let the (Either in order to give him work, or in order to benefit some poor person).

There are a few more auxiliary verbs; but as their force is purely honorific, the student is referred to ¶ 402 et seq., where the subject of honorific verbs is discussed at length.

¶ 302. The Japanese have a great fondness for rounding off their sentences by one of the equivalents for "to be," or by kuru, oku, shimau, or yaru. The plain verb, without one or other of these auxiliaries, is apt to sound bald. We do not mean to say that the auxiliaries are meaningless expletives. Far from it. They always retain in the mind of the Japanese speaker a portion of their original force. But whereas English idiom for the most part simply states the occurrence of an action, Japanese idiom delights in describing more particularly the manner of the action's occurrence with reference to the subsidiary ideas of "coming," "finishing," etc., which the auxiliaries express. For instance, an English maid-servant, speaking of a piece of dirty linen, will say "I will have it washed, Sir." Her Japanese sister would say Arawashite okimasho, lit. "Having caused (some one) to wash (it, I) will put (it)," that is to say, "I will have it washed, and there it will be." The simple verb merely states a dry fact. The addition of the auxiliary makes the action seem to pass vividly before you. sentence becomes lifelike and picturesque.

CHAPTER IX.

The Verb (concluded).

PASSIVE AND POTENTIAL VERBS.

¶ 303. The Japanese language has no special conjugation for the passive voice. All passive verbs belong to the second (active) conjugation, the paradigm of which has been given on p. 156. They are derived from the corresponding active or neuter verbs according to the following rule:—

In verbs of the 1st conjugation add reru, in verbs of the 2nd and 3rd conjugations add rareru, to the negative base, thus:

The irregular verbs kuru, to come;" shinuru, "to die;" and suru, "to do," have the passives korareru, shinareru, and serareru respectively. The polite termination masŭ is not susceptible of the passive form.

- ¶ 304. A glance at the origin of the Japanese passive will furnish the student with a key to all the difficulties connected with it. Properly speaking, the so-called passive is not a passive at all, but an active in disguise. Such a form as utareru, for instance, is etymologically uchi¹ ari² eru³, as literally as possible "to get being beating," i.e, "to get a beating," "to get beaten," hence "to be beaten." Similarly irareru is from the stem i, a euphonic r, and arieru, i.e., "to get being shooting," "to get a shooting," "to get shot." Hence the place of all passive verbs in the second conjugation along with the verb eru, "to get." Hence, too, the fact that intransitive verbs are susceptible of passive forms, such as furareru, "to get rained upon," "to have it rain," from furu, "to rain;" shinareru, "to have some one die."
- ¶ 305. This curious idiom may be better illustrated by some complete sentences, thus:

Otottsan ni okorareru oh!

ni okorareru (or make) papa angry (i' You will be got angry with you;" more lit. 'You will be got angry with by papa."

Anna kyaku ni korarecha, meiwaku shimasu. perplexity does.

man doesn't know what to do, when he has Such guests by getting-come, such guests as those come to the house;" more lit. "when he is come to

Or take from the opening sentence of the second chapter of the "Botan Doro" in the Practical Part of this work, the words shimbu sama real-father non-existent August Mr. byas-for. narare.... getting-become Parsed literally, they signify "Being died by his father;" but they simply mean "Having had his father die," or, as we should generally express it, "Having lost his father."

- N. B. As shown in the above instances, the preposition "by" of English passive constructions is expressed by the postposition mi. Some further examples will be found in ¶ 105.
- ¶ 306. The following examples are of a somewhat different nature:

Ano hilo wa, dare ni
That person as-for, everybody de mo homerarele imasŭ. body."
by even, getting-praised is.

Kono inu wa, muyami ni
This dog as-for, recklessly hoeru kara, hito ni gets-distiked.

"i' This dog gets itself distiked, because it is for ever barking."

Kubi voo hanerareta.

Heud (accus.) yot-struck-off.

("He got his head cut off," less lit. "His head was cut off."

Ashi vo inu Leg (accus.) dog kui-tsŭkaremashĭla. (I) have-got-bitten. ni hitten by a dog;" less lit.
"I have been bitten in the leg by a dog;" still less lit.
"My leg has been bitten by a dog."

Oshii koto ni wa, yūkyō ni Regrettable fuct as-for. pleasure by, kokoro wo ubavoaremashile, heart (accus.) having-got-stolen, gyō ga orosoka ni business (nom.) remissness to narimashila.

t as-for. pleasure by, ubavoaremashile, he has become engrossed in he has become engrossed in (lil. has got his heart stolen by) pleasure, and has become remiss in his work."

has-become.

N. B. The phraseology of this last example would hardly be understood by the lower classes.

- ¶ 307. The presence of wo in such examples as the last three is apt to puzzle the beginner. But there is nothing really illogical about it. The word accompanied by wo actually is in the accusative in Japanese, as shown by the literal translations we have given. It is not in any way the subject of the sentence. That its English equivalent in a free translation may happen to be the indirect object of the verb, or even a nominative, only shows how necessary it is for those who would speak idiomatically to get into the habit of looking at ideas from the Japanese point of view. The real nominative here, as in sentences of every kind, is very rarely expressed in Japanese. (Conf. ¶ 131, p. 92.)
- ¶ 308 It is important for the student, when occupied with Japanese passive constructions proper, to compare what has been said in ¶ 293 (p. 190) concerning an intransitive idiom with aru, "to be," by which the English passive is frequently expressed. To that paragraph he is accordingly referred.
- ¶ 309. The passive passes by a natural transition into the potential sense. If such and such an action is performed by me, evidently I am able to perform it. If it is not performed by me, a somewhat hasty logic will assume that I am not able to perform it. Hence okareru may mean either "to be put," or "to be able to put;" korareru may mean either "to have some one else come to one" ("to be comed"), or "to be able to come."
 - N. B. The single form omowareru, from omou, "to think," is somewhat exceptional. When taken potentially, it does not mean "to be able to think," but "to venture to think," "I am inclined to think."
 - N. B. For the natural transition of these passive-potential forms to an honorific sense, see ¶ 403.

Ano hito ni wa, sake wa ("He cannot drink that person by as-for, liquor as-for sake." (More lit. "Sake nomarenai. does not get drunk by does-not-get-drunk.

Gozen ga taberaremasen. Rice (nom.) gets-not-euten. ''I can't taste a morsel.

Mairaremasŭ.

"One can go."

Ikaresō mo nai.

Likely-to-be-able-to-go even am-not.
(or more politely gozaimasu).

'' I am not likely to be able to go."

Mazukŭte taberaremasen. Being-nasty, cannot-cat.

eat."

Kyō no atsŭsa wa, korae-To-day 's heat as-for, cannotraremasen. bear.

"The heat today is unbearable."

¶ 310. Potentiality is often otherwise expressed by means of the verb dekiru, a corruption of the Classical (i)de-kuru, "to come out," to "forthcome." Dekiru has assumed the signification of "to eventuate," "to take place," "to be ready," "to be done," "possible," but must often be rendered in English by the active "can," "can do," thus:

Watakŭshi wa agaru koto ga as-for, go-up fact (nom.) dekimasen kara, anata ga fortheomes-not because. (nom.) you idekudasaru koto honourable exit eondescend fact (nom.) dekimasĭı nara. 122 me forthcomes if, honourable eyes onkakarimashō. will-probably-hang.

"As I cannot go to you, I can only see you if you will be so kind as to come to me."

The original intransitive meaning of dekiru sufficiently explains why this verb is construed with the nominative particle ga, and not with the accusative particle wo,—a point which foreigners often fail to grasp.

¶ 311. Impossibility is sometimes expressed by means of the verb kaneru, "to be unable," "cannot," which is suffixed to the indefinite form, thus:

Sekkaku no o sasoi

Special-pains of honourable invitation de gozaimasu ga,— konnichi wa is although, to-day mairi-kanemasŭ.
go-eannot.

"I am sorry I cannot avail myself of your exceedingly kind invitation for to-day."

Makoto ni mōshi-kanemashīta Truth in say-could-not ga,— kasa wo ip-pon although, umbrellu(accus.) one-piecey o kashi kudasaimashi.
honourably lending condescend.

"I hardly like to ask you for it, but would you kindly lend me an umbrella?"

This idiom, which is inherited from the Written Language, is now heard only from the lips of the educated.

¶ 312. The verb morau, "to receive" (more politely itadaku, "to put on the head," in allusion to the Japanese custom of raising a present to the forehead), construed with the gerund, helps to form an idiom which closely resembles the so-called passive both in formation and meaning, thus:

Shimbun wo yonde morau, Newspaper (accus.) reading to-receive,

i.e., "to receive [somebody else's] reading of the newspaper," or, as we should generally say, "to have the newspaper read aloud to one."

Monde morau.
Rubbing to-receive.

{ "To have one-} self shampooed." Asa hayaku okoshite Morning early, rousing morailai.
wish-to-receive.

"I wish to be called early in the morning."

Doka go shusen woo shuse ("I wish you please august ussistance (accus.) doing would be so very itadakilo gozaimasu. kind as to help me." wishing-to-receive um. (very polite)

- N. B. These last two examples show how wishing is expressed in the passive voice, the desiderative adjective of passive verbs not being in colloquial use.
- ¶ 313. Many English passive verbs must be rendered by Japanese intransitives. This happens when the idea is one which does not necessarily imply the action of an outer agent, as in kūtabireru, "to be tired;" odoroku, "to be astonished;" tasūkaru, "to be saved" (not by another person, which would be the passive tasūkerareru, but rather "to be safe owing to having escaped from danger"); yorokobu, "to be pleased; "hasen¹ nu² au², "to be shipwrecked," lit. "to meet² with² shipwreck.¹" After all, "to be tired," "to be astonished," "to be pleased," are not necessarily passive ideas even in English, as may be seen by comparing them with such synonyms as "to be weary," "to wonder," "to rejoice."
 - N. B. Many of the verbs here spoken of are inchoative, i.e., they mark the beginning of a condition. For instance, kŭtabireru means properly "to become tired;" nureru is "to get wet;" kawaku is "to get dry." "I am tired" is expressed by kŭtabirete iru, or by the past tense kŭtabiremashita. Similarly:

Nurete imasu, or Nuremashita.

"I am (i.e., have become) wet."

Kimono ga kawakimashita.

"Your clothes are dry" (i.e., have become dry after having been wet).

¶ 314. The aversion of the Japanese language to the use of passive constructions is strongly marked. In nine cases out of ten, the English passive must be replaced either by one of the intransitive verbs just mentioned, or by an active though subjectless construction, thus:

Risŭke¹ to² iu³ otoko⁴, "A man called Risŭke;" lit. "A man⁴ (of whom people) say³ that² (he is) Risŭke¹."

Kyo-nen¹ tateta² uchi³, "A house built last year," lit. "A houses (which some one) built² last-year."

Ate¹ ni² narimasen³, "It is not to be depended upon," lit. "(It) becomes-not³ to² reliance¹."

Yoshita¹ hō² ga³ yokarō⁴, "It had better be given up," hit. "The forbore¹ side² will-probably-be-good⁴."

Kore¹ wa² nani³ ni³ tsŭkaimasŭ⁵ ? "What is this used for?" lit. "As-for² this¹, (people) use⁵ (it) for⁴ what⁸?"

Kore¹ wa², nan³ de⁴ dekite⁵ orimasŭ⁶? "What is this made of?" lit. "As-for² this¹, what³ by forthcoming is⁶?"

Konna¹ tansu² wa³, doko⁴ de⁵ kaemasŭ⁶ ? "Where are such cabinets as this to be bought?" lit. "As-for² such¹ cabinets², where ⁴ at⁵ are-buyable⁶?"

These examples, together with those given on pp. 57—8 and in ¶ 439, besides others scattered throughout the volume, may serve to show the student how passive idioms are avoided. He could hardly do better than forbid himself the use of them altogether during the first six months of his battle with the language.

ON CERTAIN INTRANSITIVE VERBS.

¶ 315. Japanese has a large class of verbs which it is generally convenient to translate by English passive or potential idioms, but which in Japanese itself are, properly speaking, intransitive. Even in English we feel a difference between two such assertions as "The gold is melting in the furnace," and "The gold is being melted in the furnace." In the first case the melting appears as a spontaneous event; in the second case it is explicitly declared to be the work of some outer agent. The verb of the former corresponds to the Japanese tokeru, "to melt" (intransitive); that of the latter to tokareru, "to get melted" (passive derived from the transitive toku, "to melt"). There are thus numbers of intransitive verbs of the second conjugation, formed from transitives of the first conjugation by changing the termination u into eru:—

206 THE VERB.

TRANSITIVE.	INTRANSITIVE.
kaku,	kakeru,	" to write."
kiru,	kirer u ,	"to cut."
toku,	tokeru,	'' to melt."
toru,	toreru,	" to take."
uru,	ureru,	'' to sell."
yomu,	yomeru,	" to read."

- ¶ 316. The transitives kiru, uru, yomu, etc., are used in translating such phrases as "to cut a slab of stone," "to sell goods," "to read a sentence." The intransitives kireru, ureru, yomeru, are used in translating such phrases as "This stone cuts easily," "These goods sell cheaply," "This sentence does not read well." The Japanese construction is less closely followed, but practical convenience often best served, by employing the word "can," thus:
 - "You can cut this stone easily."
 - "These goods can be sold cheaply."

More especially is this the case when the original verb is itself intransitive according to English ideas, thus: iku, "to go;" ikeru, "(I) can go." But there is never any reference to "I" or "can" in the mind of the Japanese speaker.

- ¶ 317. The difference between the intransitives in eru and the true potentials in areru and rareru is that the latter tend to express moral ability—"may" rather than "can,"—hecause the moral ability to perform an action depends on the sanction of a law outside the agent; whereas the forms in eru express a physical ability—"can" rather than "may,"—because the physical ability to perform an action is generally independent of any outer will. Thus ikemasü means "one can go" (because the way is easy, or because one is a good walker). Ikaremasü means "one can go" (because there is no prohibition against so doing). It is true that the two forms are sometimes confounded, just as English speakers occasionally use "can't" where "mayn't" would be more appropriate.
 - .V. B. Ikenai (politely ikenasen) is an idiom of constant occurrence in the sense of "(that) won't do."
- ¶ 318. The difference in meaning between the passive forms in areru and rareru and the intransitives in eru, the former implying, and the latter not implying, the action of an outer agent, may be illustrated by the following example. Kiraremashĭta would be used in speaking of a man who had been killed (lit. cut) by some highwayman or other person. Kireta would be used in speaking of a rope which had snapped spontaneously, or of friendly intercourse which had dropped without either of the parties to it formally breaking with each other.
- ¶ 319. Verbs belonging to the second and third conjugations are not capable of forming intransitives in eru, and therefore make shift with the passive potentials in rareru. Note however mieru, "to be visible," "to seem," formed irregularly from miru, "to see." Like it is kikoeru, "to be audible," formed from kiku, "to hear."

¶ 320. The following are a few examples of intransitives:

Sozoshikute kikoemasen. Being-noisy, is-not-audible.

"There is such a row, I can't hear a Ienai kolo wa nai. Cannot-say fact as-for, is-not.

yomemasu | "Oh! yes, one can is-readable read it; but it is exhandwriting."

Observe the repetition of the verb at the beginning of this last example. A specially strong emphasis is often expressed by this idiom, for which see ¶ 124 (p. 88).

ON TRANSITIVE AND INTRANSITIVE PAIRS OF VERBS.

¶ 321. In English the same word commonly does duty both as a transitive and as an intransitive verb, the context alone determining in which of these acceptations it is to be understood. Sometimes the passive does duty for the intransitive, sometimes altogether different words are employed. In Japanese the transitive and intransitive meanings are almost always expressed by different verbs derived from the same root, thus:

INTRANSITIVE.

TRANSITIVE.

- N. B. Sometimes only one of the pair is in modern use, e.g., hosu, "to dry" (1st. conj., trans.), the corresponding intransitive of which—hiru (3rd. conj.)—is now always replaced by the synonymous verb kowaku.
- ¶ 322. The derivation of these pairs of verbs from a common root follows no fixed rule. Practice and the dictionary are the only guides. At the same time we may note that:
 - I. Numbers of intransitives of the 1st. conjugation end in aru, thus:

```
"to be reformed."
aratamaru.
                                     Such mostly "to hang."
kakaru.
                                  corresponding "to be piled up."
                                  tives in eru belonging
kasanaru.
                                  to the 2nd. conjugation,
             "to be mixed."
mazaru.
                                  thus, aratameru, kakeru,
             "to be fixed."
sadamaru.
                                  kasaneru, etc.
             "to stop."
todomaru,
```

The reason for such verbs in aru all being intransitives is that they are formed by the agglutination of the substantive verb aru, "to be," to the stem.

¶ 323. 11. Numbers of transitives of the 1st. conjugation have stems ending in s, thus:

kesu, "to extinguish."
kowasu, "to break."
mawasu, "to tuin."
modosu, "to give back."
utsusu, "to remove."
wakasu. "to boil."
The corresponding intransitives follow no fixed analogy.
```

The s terminating the stem of such verbs is probably—in many cases at least—a fragment of the auxiliary suru, "to do."

REFLECTIVE VERBS.

¶ 324. The Japanese language has no reflective verbs. But we may, before quitting the subject of intransitive verbs, draw attention to the fact that many Japanese intransitives correspond to European reflectives, as, for instance, the following:

JAPANESE INTRANSITIVES. ENGLISH REFLECTIVES.

jisalsu suru,

asobu, "to amuse oneself" ("to play").

hataraku, "to exert oneself" ("to work").

kŭtabireru, "to tire oneself" ("to get tired").

shĭtagau, "to conform oneself" ("to obey").

Many compounds with suru likewise correspond to English reflectives, thus:

suicide").

manzoku suru, "to content oneself" ("to be content").

shitaku wo suru, "to prepare oneself" ("to get ready").

"to kill oneself" ("to commit taikutsu suru, "to bore oneself" ("to get bored").

N. B. The alternative non-reflective English equivalents, which we have given for each of the above, will suffice to show how easy it is to render a reflective idea in some other way, and how natural it therefore was for the Japanese mind not to hit on the reflective form of verbal expression.

In cases where the word "self" would be emphasised in English, Japanese idiom adds some other word to the phrase. Speaking, for instance, of a child amusing himself (playing), one would simply say Asonde orimasü, whereas the emphatic "He is amusing himself" (i.e. playing alone) would be Hitori de asonde orimasü.

CAUSATIVE VERBS.

¶ 325. Causative verbs are derived from transitives or intransitives according to the following rule:—

In verbs of the 1st. conjugation add seru, in verbs of the 2nd. and 3rd. conjugations add saseru, to the negative base, thus:

N. E. The s of the causative termination is probably a fragment of the verb suru, "to do."

The chief irregular verbs are made causative as follows:

```
kuru, "to come;" kosaseru, "to cause to come."
shinuru, "to die;" shinaseru, "to cause to die."
suru, "to do;" saseru, "to cause to de."

The polite termination masŭ is not susceptible of the causative form.

¶ 326. An alternative method of forming the causative, which belongs to the Written Language, but which may still occasionally be heard from the lips of the educated, is to agglutinate shimeru and seshimeru instead of seru and saseru respectively, thus: krosashimeru, eseshimeru, tsükiseshimeru.

- N. B. The verb imashimeru, "to warn," is an interesting example of this method of formation. For though now current as a transitive verb, it is evidently nothing more than the old causative of imu, "to shun." When you warn a man of a thing, you naturally eause him to shun it.
- ¶ 327. All causatives are conjugated according to the paradigm of the second conjugation (p. 156) and are, like other verbs, susceptible of the passive voice, thus:
 - shiraserareru, "to be caused to know," i.e., to be informed."
 - tabesaserareru, "to be caused to eat," i.e., "to be fed." abisaserareru, "to be caused to bathe."

In practice, however, these complicated forms are rarely employed.

- ¶ 328. The Japanese causative includes several shades o meaning. Thus koshiraesaseru, the causative of koshiraeru to prepare," must be rendered sometimes by "to cause to prepare" or "to make...prepare," sometimes by "to allow to prepare" or "to let...prepare." The fundamental idea of the causative is that while the action is actually performed by one person, the question as to whether it shall be performed at all is in some way or other decided by another person.
 - N. B. In a few exceptional cases the causation is purely imaginary. For instance, you hope it will not rain to-morrow, and you say Myōnichi furasetaku nai, lit. "(I) do not wish to cause (it) to rain to-morrow."
- ¶ 329. In causative constructions, the noun standing for the person who is made to perform the action is marked by the postposition mi, and the noun standing for the person or thing the action is performed upon is marked by the postposition wo.

Kiku zwo ucki ya ni "Please make the Chrysunthemums (accus.), gardener by, gardener plant out the sugu ni uesashite kudasai. chrysanthemums at immediately causing-to-plant condescend.

Daiku200 yonde, "It will be as well to Carpenter (accus.) having-ealled. fulsugo na tokoro send for the carpenter, 7800 inconvenient place (accus.) and get him to repair naosaseru QU11. the broken places." to-comse-to-repair (nom.) (is) good.

kozŭkai Ima nin-Isukete. Now coolie communding. to "You had better tell nizva Sõit 200 saseru the coolie to come and garden 's cleansing (accus.) to-cause-to-do sweep up the garden." 77. ga(MAM.) (is) good.

Tsumari sake de mo karvaseAt-last limor even to-be-cunsedend by his getting rareru no deshō yo!

to-buy fact will-probably-be, oh!
(Example of passive of causative from the "Botan-Dōrō.")

"I tell you it will end by his getting bullied into treating the other fellow to liquor."

kaite Henn ZU0 iru kara. " Please tell the Answer (accus.) writing am because, messenger to wait matashite tsĭikai no mono 200 while write message 's person (accus,) causing-to-wait an kudasai. answer. " condescend.

- A. B. The gerunds uesashite and matashite should, strictly speaking, be uesasete and matasete, according to the paradigm of the second conjugation to which all causative verbs belong. But it is very usual in ordinary conversation thus to make the gerund of such causative verbs follow the analogy of the first conjugation.
- ¶ 330. Do not confound transitive verbs of the first conjugation whose stem happens to end in s, such as dasu, "to put outside," "to send out;" hayasu, "to grow (trans.), with causative verbs of the second conjugation, thus:

Detagatte iru kara, Wishing-to-go-out is because,
chin voo dashite yatte pug (accus.) putting-outside sending kudasai.
condescend.

iru kara,
yetara,
''The pug wants to go out; so please let it out."

Moto kara ima no yō Origin from, now 's fushion ni hige voo hayashite imain, beard (accus.) growing were shita ka?

"'Did (the Japanese) formerly grow mustaches, as they do
now?"

¶ 331. It is true that we have been obliged to use the causative word "let" in rendering the first of these sentences into English, and that we might just as well have used it in the second. Nevertheless the distinction has some importance in Japanese. It would be a great mistake to confound kasu, "to lend," with karisaseru, "to cause to borrow," just as it would be a great mistake to confound tateru, "to set up," with tataseru (from tatsu), "to cause to stand up." In the case of "lending" and "causing to borrow," the difference is quite clear even in our English idiom. In Japanese it is so in all cases. Thus, tateru means to stand some dead object up, or to "set up" as king some puppet with no will of his own. Tataseru, on the other hand, implies that the person who is caused to stand up is an agent possessed of independent volition. Tatesaseru, the causative of tateru, "to set up," would mean to cause another to set a third person up. To take another instance, orosu means to "lower," i.e., "to launch," a vessel into the water, while orisaseru (causative of oriru, "to descend") would be used, let us say, of making a person descend the side of a ravine on his own feet.

- ¶ 332. Though scrupulous with regard to the above point, the Japanese are less careful than ourselves to distinguish the causative from the ordinary active idiom. Thus, where we should say "I am going to have my hair cut," they prefer to say simply Kami¹ hasami² ni³ ikimasŭ⁴, lit. "(I) go⁴ to³ cut² (my) hair¹." Even in English, however, we often violate logical exactness in precisely the same way. Thus we are apt to say that we are building a house, when what we really mean is that we are having one built for us by an architect, who himself causes it to be built by the masons.
 - N. B. The causative occurs idiomatically in a few cases where European usage goes quite a different way. Thus, "Such and such a Chinese character is read so and so" is in Japanese Nani-nani no ji voo nani-nani to yomasemasŭ, with the causative representing our passive. The idea is of course that the literary authorities induce the world at large to pronounce the character in such or such a way. The phrase Kirashimashite gozaimasŭ (from kiru, "to cut"), used by tradesmen to signify that they are "out" of an article, is a still more curious instance.
- ¶ 333. Observe that though Japanese, as stated in ¶ 327, p. 213, has passive forms of the causative, it has no causative forms of the passive. It never uses such idioms as the English "to cause to be arrested," "to cause to be altered," etc., but always employs the corresponding active instead, thus:

''We will let some motte kosa-\ Sample (accus.) carrying har-samples be brought, then consult about shite. södan matter." More lit. " IVe will ing-caused-to-come, consultation cause (some one) to bring some itashimashō. samples," etc. (we) wil-ldo.

This is but an additional illustration of the marked preference which the Japanese language has for the active over the passive voice. N. B. Note in passing how motte kuru, "to bring," becomes motte kosaseru, "to cause to bring," the second verb kuru alone suffering a change of form. All such cases are treated in the same manner.

COMPOUND VERBS.

- ¶ 334. Many complex verbal ideas are expressed in Japanese by means of compound verbs, which replace the prepositional verbs of European languages, and sometimes correspond to whole phrases, thus:
 - tobi-agaru, lit, "jump-ascend," i.e., "to ascend by jumping," "to jump up."
 - tobi-komu, lit. "jump-enter," i.e., "to enter by jumping," "to jump in."
 - tobi-kosu, "to cross by jumping," i.e., "to jump across." kiri-korosu, "to kill by cutting," i.e., "to cut to death." buchi-korosu, "to kill by beating," i.e., "to beat to death." buchi-taosu, "to prostrate by beating," i.e., "to knock down."
 - mi-mawaru, "to go round by looking," i.e., "to look round."
 - mi-olosu, "to drop in looking," i.e., "to overlook."
 mi-sokonau, "to mistake in looking," i.e., "to see wrong."
 kiki-sokonau, "to mistake in hearing," i.e., "to hear wrong."
 shini-sokonau, "to mistake in dying," i.e., "barely to escape death."
 - wake-ataeru, "to divide and give," i.e., "to give in shares."
- ¶ 335. The following are further examples chosen from among many scores of those in commonest use:
 - de-au, "to meet by going out," i.e., "to meet out of doors," "to encounter."
 - deki-agaru, "to forthcome and rise," i.e., "to be completed."

meguri-au, "to meet by going round," i.e., "to come across after many adventures."

mi-tsŭkeru, "to fix by seeing," i.e., "to notice."

mōshi-awaseru, "to cause to meet by saying," i.e., "to arrange beforehand." ("Awaseru is the causative of au,) nori okurcru, "to be late in riding," i.e., "to be too late" (for the train, etc.).

omoi-dasu, "to put outside by thinking," i.e., "to call to mind."

toki-akasu, "to loosen and clear," i.e., "to explain."

Isŭki-ataru, "to reach by striking," i.e., "to strike against," "to come to the end" (of a street).

uke-au, "to meet by receiving," i.e., "to guarantee."

uke-toru, "to take by receiving," i.e., "to take delivery of."

uri-sabaku, "to manage by selling," i.e., "to sell off."

¶ 336. Some verbs recur with special frequency in the character of second member of a compound; thus (to mention only three or four):

Dasu denotes the action of coming out, taking out, or beginning, as in hashiri-dasu, "to run out;" tori-dasu, "to take out;" naki-dasu, "to begin to cry."

N. B. Dasu is properly a transitive verb, corresponding to the intransitive deru, "to come out." Its intransitive use in such compounds as hashiri-dasu is therefore somewhat anomalous, but it is sanctioned by usage.

Kakaru shows that the action denoted by the chief verb is about to commence, or else that it is accidental, as in naori-kakaru, "to be on the road to recovery;" tūri-kakaru, "to happen to pass by.

Kakeru, generally shows that the action has been begun and then abandoned, as in shi-kakeru, "to leave half done;" hanashi-kakeru, "to break off in the middle of saying something."

Kiru, "to cut," indicates totality, as in kai-kiru, "to purchase the whole" (of a consignment, etc.); kari-kiru, "to hire the whole" (of a house, etc.); shime-kiru, "to close up" (e.g. a room undergoing repairs).

Komu corresponds to the English word "in," as in tobikomu, "to jump in;" furi-komu, "to come in" (said of rain or snow coming into the house).

On the other hand, loru, "to take," is used in numberless compounds as their first member, with but little independent meaning. Thus, lori-atsŭkau, the same as atsŭkau," to manage; "tori-kaeru, the same as kaeru, "to change," "to exchange;" tori-shiraberu, "to investigate." The prefix seems to make the signification of the second verb a little more precise.

- ¶ 337. Occasionally three verbs are compounded together, as mōshi-age-kaneru, a very respectful way of expressing "to hesitate to say." It is compounded of mōsu, "to say;" ageru, "to lift up;" and kaneru, "to be unable."
- ¶ 338. Compound verbs, like simple ones, are susceptible of taking the negative, passive, potential, and causative suffixes, as:

buchi-taosanakatta, "did not knock dnown;"
buchi-taosanakatta, "could not knock down;"
buchi-taosarete, "being knocked down;"
buchi-taosaseru, "to cause to knock down;"
all from the verb buchi-taosu, "to knock down."

- ¶ 339. As illustrated in the examples we have given, the first member of a compound verb is put in the indefinite form, while the second member alone is conjugated through the various moods and tenses. The first member generally stands in an adverbial relation to the second. Thus in buchi-korosu, "to beat to death," the first member buchi shows the manner of action of the second member korosu. In some few cases, however, the signification of the two members of the compound is co-ordinated, for instance in iki-kaeru, "to go and come back again."
- ¶ 340. The Japanese language make such lavish use of compound verbs that it is essential for him who would speak idiomatically to get into the habit of employing them in preference to simple verbs wherever possible. Here are a few examples of their use :-

"It has just occurred Futo omoi-dashimashita. to me." Suddenlu think-have-put-out.

Aa! kakı-sokonaimashita. Ah! write-have-mistaken.

Kiki-sokonai desŭ. Hear-mistake (it) is.

Mõ hitotsu ii-tsükeru Koto Still "I have another one say-fer thing ga aru kara, ima no order to give to messenger who (nom.) is because, now yoon- just started off; tsŭkai 200 messenger (accus.) please call him back." kayashite kudasai. having-given-back condescend.

N. B. With regard to the gerund kayashite in this last example, observe that the verh is properly kaesu (compare kaeru, "to go back"); but the corruption kayasu is in common colloquial use.

THE EQUIVALENTS OF THE VERB "TO BE"

¶ 341. The student who is perplexed by the variety of manners in which the Japanese language expresses the sense of our substantive verb "to be," should note the following remarks:—

Aru, atta, arō, etc., except in the case to be mentioned in the next paragraph, mean properly "there is," "there was," "there perhaps will be," but are often best translated by "I (you, etc.) have," "had," "shall have," the Japanese nominative becoming the English objective case, as:

Kane ga aru. Money (nom.) (there) is. $\{ u \in A \text{ if } b \in B \text{ if }$

By the addition of masu, as arimasu, arimashita, arimasho, the expression is made more polite. Gozaimasu, gozaimashita, gozaimasho (conf. ¶ 270, p. 171) are more honorific still, but the signification is exactly the same.

Lie

probably-is.

¶ 342. However aru, arimasŭ, gozaimasŭ signify simply "to be" (not "there is") when construed with a gerund, as illustrated in ¶ 293. Gozaimasŭ also means simply "to be" when construed with an adjective, as Kono mizu wa, taihen ni karū This water as-for, awfully light "This water is gozaimasŭ. (it) is.

The certain present tense of aru and of $arimas\check{u}$ is rarely, if ever, thus used with the \bar{u} or \bar{o} form of adjectives (see p. 120 and pp. 124—5), as the adjective includes in itself the idea of the verb "to be." Thus the less polite equivalent of the above sentence would be simply Kono mizu wa, taihen ni karui. In the other tenses, however, the verb aru appears as an agglutinated suffix, as explained in ¶ 186 (pp. 128—9), and there exemplified in a paradigm; thus karukata, "was light;" $karukar\bar{o}$, "is or will probably be light," etc.

¶ 343. De aru, de atta, de arō, etc. (familiar),—De arimasŭ, de arimashīta, de arimashō, etc. (rather polite),—De gozaimasŭ, de gozaimashīta, de gozaimashō, etc. (truly polite), are the simple verb "to be" without "there,"—that is to say, they mean "I am," "he, she, or it it is," "we are," "you are," "they are, and so on through all the other tenses. Da is a corruption of de aru; datta and darō are corruptions of de atta and de arō, with which they exactly agree in meaning. (Conf. end of ¶ 88, p. 64.) These forms might with propriety be written d'a, d'atta, and d'arō, in order the more clearly to mark their composite origin.

Kore wa nan de aru? \ "What is this?"

This as-for, what is (it)? \ (More often, Kore wa nan da?)

Uso de gozaimashō. \ \ "It is probably a lie."

Tōkaidō kara mawatte itta hō ("Though you Tīkutāō by, turning went side ga kaette toku darō. will probably be (nom.)contrariwise profit will-probably-be. (politely, de gozaimashō.)

¶ 344. Desŭ, deshŭta, and deshō have the same signification respectively as de gozaimasŭ, de gozaimashŭta, and de gozaimashō, of which they are contractions. Thus the second and third examples in the preceding paragragh might equally well read thus:

Uso deshō.

Tökaidō kara mawatte itta hō ga kaette toku deshō.

- ¶ 345. Iru (3rd. conj., stem i) and oru (1st. conj., stem. ori) signify properly "to dwell," hence "to live," "to be" (in a certain place). Their chief use is as auxiliaries (see ¶ 294), in which function they are now often employed in speaking of inaminate things, notwithstanding their original signification, which would seem to limit their application to living creatures.
 - N. B. The use of iru for animate beings and aru for inanimate still, however, maintains itself in many idioms. Notice, for instance, the difference between imasŭ or orimasŭ, "he is there" (or here), "and arimasŭ, "it is there" (or here), "there is some."
- ¶ 346. Irassharu and o ide nasaru are honorific synonyms of iru, "to be," and of several other verbs, as will be shown in \P 405.
- ¶ 347. Ja, as a verb, is not heard from the lips of Tōkyō speakers. But in the Colloquial of Kyōto, in the language of the stage, and frequently in printed Colloquial (co-called), it takes the place of da. It must not be confounded with ja, the Tōkyō contracted form of the two postpositions de wa, as in Kore ja nai for Kore de wa nai, "It is not this." (Conf. ¶ 89, p. 64.)

¶ 348. Naru, "to be," not to be confounded with naru, "to become," belongs almost entirely to the Written Language. We still find, however, in common use the form naraba explained on p. 185, and such expressions as isoganakereba1 narimasen2, lit. "it-is-not2 (i.e., it won't do) if-one-hurriesnot" i.e., "you must make haste;" also occasionally the "conclusive present*" nari, used to separate the various items of an enumeration, and hence coming to correspond to our conjunction " or :"

Toka nari, hatsuka nari.
Ten-days is. twenty-days is.

"Ten or twenty days;"
less lit. "ten days or a fortnight."

¶ 349. Suru, properly "to do," sometimes passes over into the sense of "to be." See $\P\P$ 356 and 357.

THE VERB Suru.

¶ 350. No verb recurs more constantly in Japanese than the irregular verb suru, the paradigm of which has been given on p. 159, and whose primary signification is "to do," "to make," the French faire. Sometimes it stands independently in its proper sense of doing or making, the noun governed by it taking the accusative postposition zeo, as usual with transitive verbs, thus:

"To make war." Ikusa wo suru. "To make preparations." Shitaku zvo suru. "To cook" (faire la cuisine). Ryōri wo suru. "To make obstruction," i.e., Fama wo suru. "to be in the way." "To make imitation," "to imitate," also simply to "to do" (something bad). Mane wo suru.

^{*} One form of the present tense is so termed in the Written Language. Conf. ¶ 177, p. 121.

SURU. 225

Sō shite.

{ "Having done so;" "and then."

Omae dō shimasŭ? "What are you doing?"

Compare also such adjectival and adverbial expressions as *chan*¹ to² shĭta³, lit. "did³ that² quiet¹," i.e., simply "quiet;" sube-sube¹ shĭte², lit. "having-done² smooth¹," i.e., simply "smoothly." (Chan and sube-sube are onomatopes.)

¶ 351. More often suru sinks into being a mere suffix serving to verbalise nouns. Of verbs thus formed, the modern language contains an enormous number. The following are a few specimens:

from ai, "love."

,, chaku, "arrival."

,, hi, "comparison."

,, ji, "refusal."

,, ketsu, "decision."

,, satsu, "a guess."
                 "to love:"
aisuru,
chakusuru, "to arrive;"
                "to compare;"
hisuru, jisuru,
                "to refuse;"
               " to decide;"
kessuru,
                "to guess;"
sassuru,
anshin suru, "to feel at ease;" from anshin, { "an heart.
chōai suru, ''to love;'' ,, chōai, ''love."

kaikwa suru, {''to be(come)} ,, kaikwa, {''civilisation."
kenkwa suru, ''to quarrel;'' ,, kenkwa, ''a quarrel."
rōshi suru, "to die in prison;",, { rō, "prison," and shi, "death."
                                                      tōchaku, "arrival."
tōchaku suru, "to arrive;"

N. B. It seems to have become usual among transliterators to attach suru to the preceding noun (e.g. aisuru, chakusuru) when this noun consists of a single Chinese character, and to write it separately (e.g. anshin suru, chāai suru) when the noun consists of two Chinese characters. There is nothing to object to in this practically convenient distinction.

- ¶ 352. When the noun is a monosyllable, the verb formed from it by means of suru is sometimes treated as if it belonged to the first regular conjugation, thus jisanai, "he does not refuse" (as if from jisu), instead of jishinai. But this is incorrect and somewhat vulgar.
- ¶ 353. When the noun is a monosyllable ending in n, suru generally changes to zuru in the Written Language, and thence to jiru in Colloquial speech, this jiru being conjugated regularly according to the paradigm of the third conjugation. The same thing sometimes happens even when the final letter is not n, thus:

anjiru, "to be anxious;" from an, "opinion."

ōjiru, "to correspond;",, ō, "correspondence."

ronjiru, "to argue;",, ron, "argument.

sonjiru, "to be injured; ,, son, "injury."

¶ 354. The examples given in ¶¶ 351—3 are all Chinese words. Suru is less frequently attached to words of native Japanese origin. The following and several others are, however, in common use:

agari-sagari suru, "to go up and down;" from the indefinite forms (used substantively) of agaru, "to ascend," and sagaru, "to descend."

ne-gaeri suru, "to turn in bed;" from neru, "to lie," "to sleep," and kaeru, "to exchange."

kega suru, "to be wounded;" from kega, "a wound."

¶ 355. There are a few instances of zuru or jiru (for suru) being agglutinated to an adjective stem, as:

karonjiru, "to think lightly of;" from karui, " "light."

^{*} Karoki, karoshi in the Written Language, whence the o of karonjiru.

omonjiru, "to esteem;" from omoi, "heavy."

But these words sound bookish, and are not much used in genuine Colloquial.

¶ 356. Just as in French the expression faire chaud does not mean "to make hot," but "to be hot," so also in Japanese the verb resulting from the combination of suru with a noun is not necessarily a transitive verb. It may indeed be transitive; but sometimes it is intransitive, and sometimes it corresponds to an English passive, as variously illustrated in the examples given in the preceding paragraphs. In a few cases, e.g., shōjiru (for shōsuru), "to produce" or "to be produced," it has a double acceptation. Usage is the sole arbiter in each instance. When usage sanctions the transitive use, then the corresponding passive is obtained by substituting for suru its passive serareru or sareru, thus:

aisuru, "to love;" aiserareru, "to be loved."

chōchaku suru, "to thrash; "chōchaku sera- { "to get a thrashing."

omonjiru, "to esteem;" omonjirareru, { "to be esteemed."

¶ 357. Sometimes suru, when used independently, takes ga instead of wo. It then signifies "to be," as in Oto ga suru, "There is a noise."

Zutsū ga suru, "There is a headache," i.e., "I have a headache."

¶ 358. Construed with the particle to, suru means "to be about to," thus:

Ikō to shite, "Being about to go."

Construed with the particle ni, suru forms an idiom which the following sentence may serve to illustrate:

Kaette kara no koto ni shiyō. \ "I will leave it till Having-returned after s' thing to will-do. \ after my return."

VERBS LIABLE TO BE MISTAKEN FOR EACH OTHER.

- ¶ 350. Foreign students of Japanese are often naturally perplexed by the fact that the stems of many verbs of the 1st. conjugation end in r, while two of the "bases" (the certain present and the conditional base) of verbs of the 2nd. and 3rd. conjugations always contain an r. For instance, is shaberu, "to chatter," of the 1st, conjugation or of the 2nd.? It is of the 1st., because the stem is shaber, the indefinite form shaberi, and the negative base shabera. On the other hand, tsumeru, "to pack," is of the 2nd. conjugation, the letter r belonging in this case, not to the stem, but to the termination. Similarly chir-u, "to fall" (like faded flowers), is of the 1st. conjugation, while ni-ru, "to boil," is of the 3rd. Especially perplexing are such pairs of verbs as her-u (1st. conj.), "to diminish," and he-ru (2nd. conj.), "to pass through"; kir-u (1st. conj.), "to cut," and ki-ru (3rd. conj.), "to wear." Neither is it easy at first sight to distinguish correctly all the forms of, say, todomar-u, the intransitive verb "to stop," from those of todome-ru, the corresponding transitive verb "to stop." Practice and the dictionary are the only guides in this matter.
- ¶ 360. The comparative paradigm on the opposite page will serve to illustrate the differences obtaining, in the various moods and tenses, between pairs or sets of like-sounding verbs, such as those above-mentioned. The three verbs given are all in daily Colloquial use. They are:

iru, 1st. conj., stem ir; "to go in," used chiefly in the sense of "to be useful," and in the phrase ki ni iru, "to go into one's mind," i.e., "to be agreeable to one."

ireru, 2nd. conj., stem ir; "to put in." iru, 3rd. conj., stem i; "to dwell," "to be."

Iru, "to go in," and ireru, "to put in," are related to each other as respectively the intransitive and transitive forms of the same verb. The resemblance of these two to iru, "to be," is merely fortuitous.

VERBS USED AS OTHER PARTS OF SPEECH.

- ¶ 362. Some few verbs, mostly in the gerundial form, are used as postpositions, e.g.,
 - motte, "with," "by means of;" from motsu, "to hold." ni yotte, "owing to;" from yoru, "to rely."
- ¶ 363. Others correspond to English adverbs, adverbial phrases, or conjunctions, thus:
 - amari, "too (much);" indef. form of amaru, "to exceed."

 hajimele, "for the first time," gerund of hajimeru, "to "never before." begin" (trans.).
 - kaetle, "contrary to what one might expect;" gerund of kaeru, "to return" (intrans.).
 - kiri (vulg. kkiri), used as a suffix meaning "only," e.g. sore-kiri, "only that;" indef. form of kiru, "to cut."
 - nokorazu, "without exceppengative gerund of nokoru, tion," "all." } "to remain."
 - sayō nara, "good-bye," lit. "if that nara(ba). conditionbe so (we shall meet again)." al of naru, "to be."
 - semete, "at least," "at most; gerund of semeru, to "treat with rigour."
 - shiite, "urgently;" gerund of shiiru, "to urge."
 - subste, "altogether," "all." { gerund of substru, "to unite in one."
 - latoeba, "for instance;" condit. of latoeru, "to compare."
- ¶ 364. The present tense is in some few cases doubled and used adverbially, thus:
 - kaesu-gaesu, "over and over again;" from kaesu, "to send back."
- ¶ 365. It has already been shown in pp. 140—1 how Japanese verbs, and phrases formed from verbs, frequently replace the adjectives of European languages.

CHAPTER X.

THE ADVERB, INTERJECTION, AND CONJUNCTION. SPECIAL PHRASEOLOGY.

- ¶ 366. Japanese has few if any true adverbs. Almost all the words corresponding to our adverbs prove, on examination, to be stragglers from the other parts of speech. It will, however, afford some insight into the nature of the language, and be practically useful to students, to glance at the various expedients by which the necessity for adverbs is obviated.
- ¶ 367. The indefinite forms in ku of adjectives are used adverbially, and correspond for the most part to English adverbs in "ly," although, as has been explained in ¶¶ 180—181 (pp. 122—4), such is not their original force, nor indeed their invariable force even at the present day:—

Zōsa naku dekimasŭ. { "It can easily be Difficulty not-being, (it) forthcomes. } done."

Atarashiku tsükurimashita. { "It has been newly Newly have-made. { built."

Kitanarashĭku¹ miemasŭ². "It looks² dirt(il)y¹.

- N. B. Some few adjectives are no longer used colloquially, except in the ku form corresponding to our adverbs, e.g., kotogotoku, "altogether;" mattaku, "quite."
- ¶ 368. Japanese nouns often correspond to European adverbs, e.g., kon-nichi, lit. "this day," i.e., "to-day;" jū-bun, lit.

"ten parts," i.e., "plenty," "exceedingly;" ō-kala, lit. "great side," i.e., "mostly;" ko-ko, lit. "this" (1st. ko), "place" (2nd. ko), i.e., "here." (Conf. ¶ 64, p. 45.) Words of this class retain their substantive character so completely that the equivalents of such particles as "of," "at," "from," etc.,—in fact the postpositions,—can be construed with them as readily as with any other substantives, thus:

Doko made o ide ni
Where till, honourable exit to narimasŭ ?
becomes?

One ide ni
'' How far are you going?"

Asŭko kara saki wa, ji-There from, front as-for, imki desŭ. mediately is.

Ato de koko voo sõji "Please clean this After by, here (accus.) cleaning room afterwards."

shite kudasai.
doing condescend.

"Please clean this room afterwards."

(Said to the servant at a hotel.)

Sonna ni sawaija
so as-for-making-a-row, 'I say! you mustn't kenai yo!
is-no-go, oh!

¶ 369. Some nouns receive an adverbial tinge by means of reduplication, as:

 $h\bar{o}$ - $b\bar{o}$, "everywhere;" from $h\bar{o}$, "side," "direction."

naka-naka, "very," "more than you might think;" from naka, "inside."

tabi-tabi, "often;" from tabi, "a time" (une fois).

toki-doki, "sometimes;" from toki, "time" (le temps).

tokoro-dokoro, "here and there;" from tokoro, "a place."

- ¶ 370. There are also many words which are nouns etymologically speaking, but which are always or almost always used as adverbs, and which mostly take the postposition ni, as jiki or jiki ni, "immediately:" sude ni, "already;" sugu or sugu ni, "directly."
- ¶ 371. Phonetic decay has considerably altered some of these words in their passage from other parts of speech to the state of adverbs. Thus $d\bar{o} \nearrow$ "how?" is a corruption of dono $y\bar{o} \nearrow$ "what manner?" Similarly $k\bar{o}$, "in this way," "thus;" $s\bar{o}$ or $say\bar{o}$, "in that way; and \bar{a} , "in that way," are derived from kono $y\bar{o}$, sono $y\bar{o}$, and ano $y\bar{o}$ respectively.
- ¶ 372. Many words which we are obliged to translate by adverbs or adverbial phrases are the gerunds of verbs, as explained in ¶¶ 362—3 (p. 230). How truly words of this class retain their verbal force even at the present day, may be seen from the use of such phrases as hitori¹ mo² nokorazu³, "all without exception," lit. "even² one-person¹ remaining-not³ (behind)."
- ¶ 373. The following are some of the chief Japanese words corresponding to our adverbs, not already mentioned in this chapter. More will be found in the paradigm on p. 52.

bakari, "about," "only."

chi(t)to, alittle," chotto, slightly."

dake, "only," "about,"
"as...as."

hanahada, "very."

ikaga ? "how?"

iku bun ka, "rather," "more or less."

itsudemo, "always;" with a negative verb, "never."

ma, "quite" (always combined with the following adjective, whose initial consonant is doubled, as makkurai, "pitch-dark," from kurai, "dark.") mada, "still;" with a negative verb, "not yet." mata, "again." mazu, "in the first place," "well!" (In this sense often abbrev. to ma.) "already;" with a negative verb, "no more." moito, "more" (adverb). naru-take, "as . . . as possible;" "if possible." naze ? "why?" sate. "well!" sŭkoshi, "a little." tada (vulgarly and emphatically tatta), "merely," " nothing but. tadaima, "immediately" (from tada and ima. "now.") takŭsan, same as taisō.

tokoro de, "thereupon,"
"and so."

tokoro ga, "nevertheless,"
"still."

yahari (emphatically yappari), "also."

yohodo (emphatically yoppado), "very."

zehi, "positively" (from Chinese ze, "good," and hi, "bad," like our phrase "for better for worse").

zuibun, "a good deal,"

"pretty" (as in "pretty tired ").

taisō, "much," "very."

N. B, Avoid, as much as possible, the Japanese equivalents for "very" and "a little," as the Japanese rarely employ them.

¶ 374. It may seen strange that the foregoing list should contain no equivalent for our adverbs of affirmation and negation, "yes" and "no." The reason is that there are no words exactly corresponding to our "yes" and "no' in Japanese. There exists, it is true, a word ie which means "no;" but it is little used, except when the denial is emphatic. The word he! hei! or hai! which may sometimes be translated by "yes," is properly an interjection used to show that one has heard and understood what has been said to one. It does not generally imply assent to a statement. Thus, when a tea-house girl is called, she will cry out hei! simply to show that she is coming.

Instead of "yes," the Japanese say "that is so so so \bar{s} so \bar{s} da, more politely $s\bar{o}$ des \bar{u} , still more politely say \bar{o} de gozaimas \bar{u} . Similarly for "no" they say "that is not so," $s\bar{o}$ ja nai, politely sayō de gozaimasen. Or else they repeat the verb of the question, thus:

O wakari ni nariHonourable understanding to hasmashita ka ? (For use of past tense become ? (here, conf. ¶ 274, p. 176.) (stand?"

Wakarimashita.

Wakarimashita.

Have-understood.

Wakarimasen.
Understand-not.

"Yes."

"No."

O ide m narimas \check{u} ka ? \ Honourable exit to becomes ? \} "Is he coming?"

 $Say\bar{o}$ de gozaimasŭ. so (it) is.

- N. B. In familiar intercourse, sayō de gozaimasŭ is often abbreviated to the single word sayō.—Some speakers use the word ikanimo for "yes;" but this is decidedly old-fashioned.
- ¶ 375. The Japanese have a habit, which generally proves irritating to foreigners, of answering one question by another, especially in cases where a European would simply say that he did not know. Thus:
 - O kaeri ni narimashila ka ? ("Have they come Honourable return to has-become ? home?"

Ikaga de gozaimasŭ ka? ("How is it?" i.e., "I How is ? {don't know."

¶ 376. Japanese idiom differs from ours with respect to the answer given to a negative interrogation. The following examples will serve to illustrate the difference, which must be constantly borne in mind if grave misunderstandings are to be avoided:—

"Isn't he coming?"

Kimasen ka ?

"No." (I.e., It is so as the negative in your question implies.)

"Oh! yes, he is."

"Of course he is!"

"Kimasŭ.

"Kimasŭ to mo.

(Conf. middle of p. 85.)

¶ 377. Adverbial phrases are formed by means of the post-positions de, mo, to, and especially m, thus:

don to, "with a bang."

jōzu ni, "skillfully."

maru de, "quite."

metta ni (with a negative verb), "rarely."

shidai-shidai ni, "little by little."
sude ni, "already."
tonto mo (with a negative verb), "not in the least."
waza to, "on purpose."

- ¶ 378. Onomatopes, like the English words "ding-dong," "topsy-turvy," "higgledy-piggledy," etc., which are generally classed as adverbs, are extremely numerous in Japanese. Such are bura-bura, expressive of sauntering; guzu-guzu, expressive of complaining or scolding; kyan-kyan, expressive of the yelping of a dog; pika-pika, expressive of glitter; soro-soro, expressive of slow movement; bon-yari, expressive of obscurity or listlessness; katchiri, expressive of a clicking sound, etc., etc. Almost all words beginning with the letter p are onomatopes, excepting pan, "bread."
 - .V. B. There is room for doubt whether Japanese pan is simply the like-sounding Spanish word, or whether it may not rather be a corruption of Portuguese "pāo," anciently spelt "pam;" for the Portuguese came to Japan fully forty years before the Spaniards, namely, in the middle of the 16th century.

INTERJECTIONS.

¶ 379. The chief interjections, besides he! (see p. 234) and those more or less inarticulate "ah's!" "oh's!" and "eh's?" which occur in all languages, are:

Aita / a cry of pain, derived from the exclamation aa ! and ita, the stem of the adjective itai, "painful."

Ara! an exclamation of surprise, used chiefly by women.

Dokkoisho! a sort of sigh of relief, used for instance when one has safely lifted something heavy and put it in its place. This word is rarely employed by any but the lower classes.

¶ 380. $D\bar{o}mo$, lit. "even (mo) how? ($d\bar{o}$?) This much-used term expresses difficulty, hopelessness, astonishment, and corresponds to some extent to such English phrases as "do what I may," "well I never!" "really now!" or to an emphasis on the chief word of the clause, thus:

Omoshirokule dōmo...

the sentence perhaps remaining unfinished. But very often dōmo or naka-naka* dōmo is a mere expletive, used to gain time and to cover paucity of ideas.

Hate na! equivalent to our "well, I never!"

¶ 381. Ke or kke, a final expletive conveying the idea of an indistinct conviction on the speaker's part, is often translatable by "surely" or "I believe." Thus atta means "there was;" but atta-kke is "surely there was!"

Ashila made ni dekiru

To-morrow by in, will-be-ready that, other-side at, said-surely.

"I believe he said it would be ready by tomorrow."

Ke is used only in the most familiar intercourse.

Koso, an emphatic particle, used to strengthen the word which precedes it.

Mā / an exclamation of surprise or entreaty, used chiefly ^{*} See ¶ 369, p. 232.

by women. Very often it sinks into meaning nothing at all. Do not confound it with ma, for mazu (see p. 234.).

Nan emphatic, see footnote to ¶ 197, pp. 135—6.

- ¶ 382. Naruhodo! a very useful word, for which there is no exact English equivalent. When pronounced in a tone of great surprise, it corresponds to "who would have thought it?" "you don't say so!" "well, I never!" But more often it is pronounced in an assenting tone of voice, and then it means "oh! indeed," "really!" "I see." When some one is telling a long story, it is usual to chime in with a naruhodo! at every point he makes, or every time he pauses to take breath. Instead of naruhodo, one may say sö¹ desŭ² ka³ ? lit. "is² that so¹?" or less politely sō ka?
- ¶ 383. Ne or $n\bar{e}$, vulgarly and provincially $n\bar{a}$ or $n\bar{o}$, serves to draw attention to the preceding word or clause, which it emphasises and separates, somewhat after the fashion of zva (see p. 85). Indeed it may be superadded to zva for the sake of greater emphasis and distinctness, as Kore wa ne, "This,-this." The meaningless "you know," or "don't you know?" with which so many English speakers interlard their remarks, has been suggested as the nearest equivalent to it in our language. Occasionally it might be rendered in French by "n'est-ce pas?" in German by "nicht war?" and in English by such idioms as "is it?" "do you?" "won't they?" etc., according to what has gone before. Sometimes it shows that the speaker is puzzled, as so desŭ ne (pronounced in a hesitating tone of voice), "well, I don't know," or "let me see!" Ne belongs exclusively to familiar intercourse, and should never be employed on official or public occasions.

Many persons are in the habit of beginning sentences, and even of calling people, by means of the words ano ne! (ano = "that"), just as English speakers often begin by "I say!"

¶ 384. Oi! an exclamation used to call people.

Oya-oya / an exclamation of great surprise, heard chiefly from the mouths of women.

Sa or $S\bar{a}$.—Short sa is used by the lower classes to give emphasis at the end of a sentence, thus:

Kore kara iku no sa! ("Now we'll go along!"
Now from (we)go! (No is emphatic also; see ¶ 113.)

Sa and $s\bar{a}$ are used indifferently to urge, hurry, or defy, as Sa! o ide nasai! ("Come along! come Honourable exit deign! along!"

A very common idiom is sayō sa / "of course," "yes."

Yo, used emphatically at the end of a sentence, as: Arimasen yo! "I have none, and there's an end of it!"

Zo, belonging rather to the Written Language than to the Colloquial, but still occasionally heard at the end of a sentence, to which it adds emphasis. Ze seems to be a variation of zo.

N. B. The personal pronoun anata, "you," is somes intercalated in a sentence with a certain interjectional or expletive force, chiefly by members of the lower classes.

BAD LANGUAGE.

¶ 385. Japanese is honourably distinguished from most languages of the world by being totally devoid of oaths. Where, for instance, a European driver would probably swear at his unmanageable steed, a Japanese will only emphatically exclaim kore! lit. "this!" or sore! "that!" Korya! and sorya! (for kore wa, and sore wa) are used much in the same way, as scolding expletives. The words baka / "fool;" berabō-me! "scoundrel;" chikŭshō! "beast;" etc., are common terms of abuse. The me of berabō-me is a sort of particle of contempt, which may be suffixed to any noun, as ano inu-me, "that brute of a dog."

BABY LANGUAGE, ETC.

¶ 386. In Japanese, as in English, there are numerous special words and corruptions of words which are used by young children, and also by adults in addressing young children. Such are:

abayo, "goodbye" (=baby English "ta!").

an-yo, from ashi, "the feet," hence "to walk."

bāya, from obāsan, "an old lady," "granny."

bebe, "clothes."

bolchan,* "a little boy."

chan, from san, "Mr.," "Mrs.," "Miss."

enko,† "to sit."

nenne, from neru, "to sleep."

nenne; from ningvā. "a nennei, from ningyō, ''a doll."

tete, "the hands;" from te repeated.

ŭmamma,† "food."

wan-wan, "a dog" (properly "bow-wow").

Most of these words are also used in addressing pet animals. Thus a pet dog's forefeet are tete, its hind feet an-yo, its little "tummy" pon-pon.

¶ 387. There are also some few words which are almost entirely confined to the fair sex. Such is, for instance, o hiya, "cold water" (lit." "honourably fresh"), which men call mizu.

^{*} Derived from $b\bar{o}san$, "a Buddhist priest," Japanese children resembling Buddhist priests in having shaven pates.

[†] Perhaps from en, "the floor," and koto, "thing," "act."

[‡] Not to be confounded with the term o mamma, "rice," "food," used by adults. Umamma is probably umai, "good to eat," twice repeated.

¶ 388. A number of objects and actions receive peculiar designations in the mouths of members of the Imperial Family, and of those privileged to address them. Although ordinary mortals can have no use for this exalted phraseology, a few specimens of it will doubtless not fail to interest the student. Some of the Court words are survivals from Classical times; some are euphemisms (e.g. ase, "perspiration," used to signify "blood"); some, as kachin and o kabe, belong also to the language of women, while others are of uncertain origin:—

Notice, too, that the Court, having for many centuries resided at Kyōto, retains a preference for Kyōto pronunciations, e.g. gozarimasŭ for gozaimasŭ, nasare for nasai, kudasare for kudasai, etc.

CONJUNCTIONS.

- ¶ 389. Conjunctions, can scarcely be said to exist in Japanese as an independent part of speech, their place being taken, partly by conjugational forms of the verb and adjective, partly by postpositions, partly by nouns. With regard to the word "and," which is in Western languages the most constantly recurring of all conjunctions, the necessity for it between verbs or clauses is almost completely obviated in Japanese by the construction with the indefinite form or the gerand, explained in ¶¶ 278-281. Between nouns, "and" is sometimes represented by ni or to, as explained in \P 109 and ¶ 119. But more often the two nouns are simply placed side by side, as Kazusa Boshū, "Kazusa and Boshū" (the names of two provinces on the ocean side of Tokyo Bay). Occasionally "and" is represented between verbs-never between nouns—by the phrase so shite (pedantically shiko shite or shika shite), lit. "having done so." But this idiom, imitated from the Chinese, must not be used too freely.
 - "But" is sometimes represented by shǐkashi; but neither must this Japanese word be repeated nearly as often as "but" is in English.
 - "Or" is sometimes expressed by means of the word nari, as explained in \P 348.
 - "Provided" is represented by such constructions as

"While" is sometimes represented by the word nagara agglutinated to the indefinite verbal form, as aruki-nagara, "while walking; sometimes by tokoro, as explained in ¶ 58.

The following references to sections of this work, in which words or constructions corresponding to the chief English conjunctions are treated of, may be found useful:

¶ 391. Details concerning the best manner of translating the English conjunctions into Japanese in various contexts belong not so much to grammar as to the dictionary. The student is accordingly referred to Messrs. Satow and Ishibashi's "English-Japanese Dictionary of the Spoken Language," where the words in question are amply illustrated.

CHAPTER XI.

HONORIFICS.

- ¶ 392. No language in the world is more saturated with honorific idioms than Japanese. These idioms affect, not only the vocabulary, but the very grammar itself. Therefore, although scattered references have been made to the subject of honorifics in former chapters, it seems advisable to gather together under one heading all the leading manifestations of a habit of speech, without a proper mastery of which it is impossible to speak Japanese with any approach to correctness.
- ¶ 393. The use of honorifics is guided by four main considerations, namely:
 - i. Honorific forms are used in speaking of the actions or possessions of the person addressed, while depreciatory or humble forms are used in speaking of oneself. In other words, what we should style the first person is self-depreciatory, and the second person complimentary.
 - ii. In speaking of others (what we should call the third person), honorifies are used only if the person spoken of is superior in rank to the person spoken to, or if he is present and, though not a superior, at least an equal, or assumed to be such for courtesy's sake.
 - iii. There are gradations in the use of honorifics, according to the greater or less respect meant to be paid to the person spoken to or of.

- iv. Honorifics have a tendency to lose their original signification, and to sink into mere marks of a conrecous style of speech. Sometimes they become absolutely meaningless.
- ¶ 394. It has been asserted by some that the use of honorifics in Japanese replaces that of the personal pronouns of European languages. This is not strictly correct. The expression go hon, for instance, means "the august book," not only etymologically, but also in the mind and intention of every Japanese speaker who makes use of it. It is only because "you" are an august person, that the words go hon come, in many contexts, to correspond pretty closely to our more precise phrase "your book." The correspondence is still only approximate; for very often go hon may mean the book of some other august lady or gentleman different from you, i.e., it may mean "her book" or "his book." In some circumstances it may denote the book of the most august of all persons, namely the Emperor, and this is indeed the more primitive signification of the Chinese character with which the word go is written. Similarly go yō, "august business," may be either "your business," "his business," or "Government business." Like considerations apply to other honorific phrases.
- ¶ 395. Descending from general considerations to particulars, the student should remember the following leading facts:—

In addressing an equal or superior, the word o, "hononrable," or go, "august" (conf.. ¶ 210, p. 143), is prefixed to most of the nouns denoting objects belonging to or connected with him in any way. Even adjectives and adverbs sometimes take one or other of the honorific prefixes. O, being of Japanese origin, is mostly employed with native Japanese words, while go, which is of Chinese origin, is mostly employed with words borrowed from the Chinese. But usage admits of numerous exceptions to this rule.—O and go are applied to the third person, subject to the limitations mentioned in \P 393.

¶ 396. Here are a few familiar instances of the use of these honorific prefixes:

```
"Your (his, her, etc.)
  O kodomo-shu.
                               children."
  O taku
                                  "Your (or his) house."
                                  "Is he at home?"
  O taku desŭ ka ?
                                  "Your (or his) absence."
  Orusu.
                                  "He is out."
  O rusu desu.
  Go shochi
                                  "Your (or his) consent."
                                  "Your (or his) relations."
  Go shinrui.
                                  "Your (or his) loss" (in
  Go son.
                               (money, etc.).
  O kega.
                                  "Your (or his) wound."
                                  "By your (or his) kind
  O kage de.
                               (influence" (lil. shade).
  Yohodo
                                  "It is very pretty" (e.g. o kirei desŭ. (
                              I this garden of yours).
   Very honourably pretty is.
  Danna
            as-for, honourably
                                  " My master is busy."
isogashiu gozaimasu.
  Go mottomo de gozaimasu.
  August very Go taikutsu de gozaimashĭtarö, (
                                     "You must have felt probably-was. | bored."
  August ledium
```

¶ 397. Occasionally the word sama, "Mr.," is added, in order to make the expression still more polite, thus:

Gokurō sama. troubleMr.

" (Thanks for) machi-dō Honourable wait-long sama. \(\text{"You have had a long sama.} \) time to wait; " or " Excuse me for keeping you waiting so long."

kinodoku Honourable poison-of-the-spirit sama. { "I am sorry for Mr. } your sake."

N. B. Regret on one's own account is expressed by the word zannen, never by kinodoku.

¶ 398. Examples such as these introduce us to the use of o and go in (so to speak) an objective way, which at first sounds very strange to European ears, thus:

Honourably cheap is.

"It is cheap, Sir," i.e., "I have the honour to offer it to you cheap."

Go busala ilashimashita.
August remissness (1)have-done.

("I have been sadly remiss about calling upon you."

Go burei mōshi-agemashita. { "I was very rude August rudeness (I) said-lifted. { to you."

jama itashimashita. ("Excuse me for Honourable obstacle (1)have-done. having interrupted you."

At a first hearing, the literal import of the individual words may cause the student to think that the Japanese speaker is applying honorifics to himself. Far from any Japanese mind is such a thought. The idea underlying these idioms is that the cheapness of my goods, and even the remissness, the rudeness, the interruption, and what not, of which I have been guilty with regard to you, have a sort of reflected glory cast on them by their connection with so exalted a personage as yourself. It is as if one should say "I have had the honour to be remiss in calling;" I had the honour to be rude to you," etc. Moreover such phrases about remissness in calling, about rudeness, etc., are for the most part mere verbiage corresponding to no actual facts.

- ¶ 399. The phrase o saki, "honourably first," is employed in two contrary ways. It sometimes signifies "Please do you go first" (après vous), sometimes "Kindly excuse me for going first."
- ¶ 400. Many words in common use take o without any honorific intent vis-à-vis the person spoken to, especially in the mouths of women and of the lower classes. Thus we daily hear such expressions as
 - o bake, "a goblin."
 - o bon, "a tray."
 - o cha, "tea."
 - o deki, "a pimple," "a boil."
 - o kane, "money."
 - o naka, "a person's inside."
 - o tagai, "mutually."
 - o tenki, "the weather."
 - o tera, "a Buddhist temple."

- o tomurai, "a funeral."
- o tsŭki sama, "the moon" (lit. "Honourable Mrs. Moon!").
- o tsuri, "small change."
- o lsuyu, "sonp" (lit. "dew").
- o yu, "hot water," "a hot bath."
- o zen, "the small trays on which Japanese food is served;" etc., etc.

These are examples of the tendency of honorifics to become meaningless. Occasionally honorifics are used with a point of satire, to convey an indirect attack under cover of an irreproachably courteous style of speech. Thus, not far from the beginning of Chap. II of the "Botan-Dōrō," the novelist Enchō tells us that Dr. Yamamoto Shijō was

- "an honourable chatter-box and an honourable quack" (o taiko-isha no o shaberi)!—Compare o seji, "flattery;" o temba, "a hoyden."
- ¶ 401. Pedantic speakers sometimes use on, the Classical word of which o is an abbreviated form. Another honorific current in ancient times was mi, synonymous with o, and still retained in such words as Mikado (see p. 35); miya, lit. "honourable house," hence "a Shintō temple," less often "a palace," and, with the addition of the word sama, "a prince" or "princess" of the Imperial Family of Japan. In the phrase o mi ashi, "your feet," the two honorifics o and mi are used pleonastically.
- ¶ 402. In order to make verbs polite, the plain forms, as given in the verbal paradigms on pp. 154-9, are replaced by those in masu, illustrated on p. 160. These are, however, scarcely honorific in the proper sense of the word, that is to say that they are more often simply marks of a courteous style than of any special respect paid to the person addressed. For the latter purpose it is usual to employ a periphrasis consisting of the word o, "honourable," the indefinite form of the verb, and mosu ("I say") if the first person is intended, or nasaru (less frequently ni naru) if the second or third person is intended. Nasaru means "to deign," ni naru means "to become." Thus tanomu, "to ask," becomes o tanomi mosu, "I ask," and o tanomi nasaru, or o tanomi ni naru, "vou ask." The past tanonda becomes o tanomi moshita and o tanomi nastta, etc. The polite termination masu may be superadded, thus: o tanomi moshimasŭ, o tanomi nasaimasŭ: o tanomi mōshimashita, o tanomi nasaimashita. The periphrases here indicated are used in addressing equals and superiors. They need not indeed always be accorded the preference over the simpler forms, but they should be scattered about pretty freely. The more exalted the rank of the person addressed, the more frequently must they be introduced.

- ¶ 403. Another way of making a verb honorific is to replace the ordinary conjugation by the corresponding potential forms, it sounding more polite to suggest that a person is able to do a thing than bluntly to state that he does it. Thus we have noborareru, for noboru, "to go up;" naku narareru, for naku naru, "to die." This locution is specially affected by the lower classes in speaking of their betters; but in some few cases it is adopted by all the world, as iraserareru and ōserareru (usually corrupted to irassharu and ossharu, as explained in the N. B. near the bottom of p. 251).
- ¶ 404. The use of the verb ageru, "to raise," construed with the gerund, shows that something is being done by that lowly person myself for some one above me. The use o itadaku shows that some one superior to me is condescending enough to do something for me. We have already noticed this incidentally under the heading of passive verbs, in ¶ 312, pp. 203—4. Here are a few additional examples:

Kiile agemashō. ("I will go and ask Hearing will-lift-up. (for you."

Kiite itadakitō

Hearing wishing-to-put-on-the-head gozaimasŭ.

an.

"I wish you would be so kind as to ask" (for me).

Oshiete itadakitai.

Teaching wish-to-put-on-the-head.

("I wish you would be so kind as to show me how."

O tsuide ni "I venture to hope Honourable opportunity in, that you will take that misete itadakitō gozaimasŭ. opportunity of letting me showing wishing-to-receive am. see it."

¶ 405. There are, moreover, several constantly recurring ideas, for which separate verbs are employed according as the expression is meant to be honorific or humble. The chief of these are:

PLAIN VERB.	HONORIFIC.	HUMBLE.
au, "to meet:"	o ai nasaru,	o me ni kakaru.
iku, "to go;"	(o ide nasaru,* (irassharu,	mairu, agaru, makaru.
$\begin{cases} iru & \text{or } \\ oru, \end{cases}$ "to be;"	(o ide nasaru, (irassharu,	iru, oru.
iu, '' to say;"	ossharu,	mōshi-ageru.
kariru, " to borrow	;" o kari nasaru,	haishaku suru,
kiku, "to hear;"	o kiki nasaru,	uketamawaru.
kuru, "to come;"	(o ide nasaru, (irassharu,	{mairu, agaru, makaru.
miru, "to see;"	goran nasaru,	haiken suru.
miseru, "to show;"	o mise nasaru,	o me ni kakeru.
suru, "to do;"	(nasaru, (asobasu,	} suru.
laberu, "to eat;"	(meshi-)ageru,	(itadaku, chōdai { sur u.
ukeru, "to receive	;" o uke nasaru,	(itadaku, chōdai { suru.
yaru, "to give;"	(kudasaru, kureru, (less polite) ager u, e) shinjō suru.

- N. B. The slightly irregular verb irassharu (see ¶ 270, p. 171), which is used to express so many shades of meaning, is a corruption of iraserareru, the potential of the causative of iru, "to enter." Ossharu, the honorific equivalent of iu, "to say," is a corruption of oserareru, the potential of the little-used verb oseru, "to say."
- ¶ 406. Of course the honorific verbs can only be employed in speaking to or of others, while the humble verbs are applied only to the speaker himself, or to some one intimately connected with him, for instance, his own child or servant.

^{*} Or o ide ni naru. Similarly in the instances given below.

The following are a few examples of their use:

me
                              "May I show it to Honourable eyes in p ting even,
yō gozaimasŭ ka ?
good

mise nasaimasen ka? "Please won't you Honourably show deign-not or Misete kudasaimasen ka? show it to me?" Showing condescend-not?

 $K\bar{o}$ in hanashi voo o "Have you heard this Such story (accus.) honourably story (or this piece of Kō iu hanashi veo kiki nasaimashita ka ? news)?" hear have-decianed ?

Mada uketamawarimasen. Still (1) have-not-heard.

"No, not yet."

Sō osshatte kudasai. So saying condescend. " Please say so."

Uso wo moshi-agemasen.
Lie (accus.) (1)say-lift-not-up. } "I am not deceiving you, Sir."

Doko ye irassharu? Where to deign-to-go?

"Where are you going?"

Gakkō ye mairimasŭ. Sehool to go.

"I am going to the college."

O daiji ni asobase. \ "Mind you take care Honourable care to be-pleased-to-do. of yourself."

¶ 407. The treatment of the imperative mood calls for special notice. The honorific verbs mentioned in ¶ 405 make use of their imperatives, thus:

```
asobase!

goran nasai!

irasshai! or irasshai-mashi!

o ide nasai!

kudasai!

meshi-agare!

nasai!

osshaimashi!

wideign to go!" (or come, or be.)

"condescend to give!"

meshi-agare!

nasai!

osshaimashi!

"deign to do!"

osshaimashi!

N. B. O ide nasai is often familiarly abbreviated to o ide; goran nasai to goran.

¶ 408. But except occasionally in addressing coolies or one's own servants, and in the naval and military words of command, the imperative mood of other verbs can scarcely be said to be in use (conf. ¶ 291, p. 189). Such a style of address would sound too rude and abrupt. The following examples will serve to illustrate the honorific periphrases by which the imperative is habitually replaced: of kaki nasai, lit. "honourably deigns to write."

o kaki kudasai, ,, "honourably condescend to write."

kaite kudasai, ,, "writing condescend."

consistent of the condescend of writing condescend."

consistent of the condescend of the condescend

N. B. Defining the difference between nasai and kudasai perhaps a little too trenchantly, we might say that the former is essentially a command, though so polite as to have its imperative force disguised, whereas kudasai is a request. Therefore kudasai should be employed when we want a friend to do something for us,—A polite imperative very common in the Written Language is obtained by means of the verb tamau, "to deign," thus: kaki-tamae, mise-tamae. It is nowadays chiefly to be heard from the lips of members of the student class.

¶ 409. The above forms are those generally used in addressing equals or superiors. In speaking to the latter, the degree of politeness may be increased by lengthening the periphrasis, thus: o1 kaki2 nasite3 kudasai4 ("honourably1 condescend deigning to write?"), o mise nastle kudasai. addressing inferiors one may say kaite kurei ("writing give"), misete kurei, or kaite o kun nasai ("writing honourably giving deign"), misete o kun nasai, and similarly with all other verbs. (Kun is a corruption of kure, the indefinite form of kureru, "to give," of which kurei is the imperative (see p. 171.) These latter forms are those to be preferred in speaking to one's own servants, to coolies, and to the servants at small inns and tea-houses. They would be too familiar as a mode of address to one's friend's servants, or to the servants at a first-class hotel. Such must always be treated to a fair amount of the honorifics illustrated in the preceding paragraphs. The same remark applies à fortiori to teachers, office-writers, respectable shop-keepers, etc. In fact, from the point of view of the proper use of honorifics, the term "inferiors" includes few but coolies, peasants, and the speaker's own children and servants. Other people may, as a matter of fact, be his social inferiors; but politeness forbids his reminding them of this by a rude mode of address. Even animals are often treated to honorifics, as when one says to a dog o ide / instead of koi / "come here!" o tachi / instead of tate! "sit up!" But this is semi-jocular.

¶ 410. It is rather common, in slipshod talk addressed to inferiors, to omit the honorific imperative, thus:

Cha wo irele. "Make (lit. put in) some tea."

Tea (accus.) putting-in. (for Cha wo irele o kun nasai.)

The sentence thus appears to end in a gerund; but the ellipsis must always be mentally supplied. Observe also the phrase... $h\bar{o}$ ga ii, "it will be good to...," "you had better...," which frequently replaces the imperative, thus:

Kō shita hō ga ii. \ ''You had better do Thus did stde (nom.) (is) good. \ it like this."

N. B. For $h\bar{s}$ conf. p 144, foot-note; for the past shita in a context where the present would better suit European ideas, see ¶ 275, pp. 176—7.

¶ 411. Dōzo and dōka, which the dictionaries give as equivalents of our word "please," are comparatively little used. The honorific equivalents of the imperative amply make good their absence. Properly speaking, both dōzo and dōka mean, not so much "please," as "somehow or other," "if possible," "by hook or by crook," "managing to do a thing," as in the following example:

watakushi no "I wish it could be Somehow-or-other of ga managed so that hĭto 200 contention (accus.) people (nom.) would support my view of the matter." (But 1 sansei shite kurereba ii approval doing if-give, (is)good, hardly darehope that ga..... they will.) but....

Arigatō, "thank you," is likewise used less profusely than its European equivalents. It must never be employed to mean "no, thank you." This latter phrase finds polite Japanese counterparts in yoroshiū gozaimasu, "it is all right (without it)," and yoshimashō, "I think I will desist."

¶ 412. The use of special honorific and humble words is occasionally exemplified in nouns as well as in verbs. Thus, whereas the general term for "head" is atama, the polite one is o tsumuri. But the honorific tendency comes into peculiar prominence in the case of nouns indicative of the degrees of relationship, of which we give the chief:

N. B. The humble words for "husband," viz. yado, uchi, and taku, generally take de wa instead of the nominative particle ga, thus:

Yado de wa, tabi ye

Husband as-for, journey to dete, rusu de gozaimasŭ.

having-gone, absent is.

"My husband is absent, having gone on a journey."

¶ 413. The words otottsan and okkasan well exemplify the remark made on p. 245, to the effect that Japanese honorifics do not replace the pronouns of other languages, though they often serve a somewhat analogous purpose. Being honorific words, otottsan and okkasan naturally serve to indicate "your father," "your mother," when I am speaking to you. But if I am addressing my own parents, they mean respectively "papa" and "mamma;" for it is natural for a dutiful son to address his parents politely. It is only in speaking of them to an equal or superior that he will be led to substitute the humble expressions oyaji and haha. The term o fukuro is slightly vulgar. The other words in the column marked "Honorific" are used only of the relatives of the person addressed, those in the column marked "Humble" only of the first and third persons.

¶ 414. Formal speakers occasionally employ humble terms that properly belong to the Written Language only. Such are gu, "stupid;" hei, "broken down;" selsu, "awkward;" so, "rough," "coarse;" as in gu-fu, lit. "the stupid father," i.e., "my father."

gu-sai, lit. "the stupid wife," i.e., "my wife."
hei-sha, lit. "the broken-down company," i.e., "our firm."
set-taku, lit. "the awkward house," i.e., "my house."
so-han, lit. "coarse rice," i.e., "the poor fare which alone I am able to offer you."

¶ 415. But generally speaking, explicitly depreciatory nouns and indeed explicitly depreciatory words of any class are rare. Speakers show their humility chiefly by abstaining from applying honorifics to themselves, or to anybody or anything connected with themselves. Thus, whereas o kuni, lit. "honourable country," serves to designate "your country," the simple word kuni is taken to mean "my country." Similarly the simple verbs komarimashita, wakarimashita, etc., naturally in most cases denote the first person, and signify respectively "I was troubled," "I understand" (lit. "have understood"), whereas Sazo o komari nasaimashitarō signifies "You must have been greatly troubled;" and O wakari ni narimashila ka 2 signifies "Do you understand?"

¶ 416. There are no polite modes of address exactly corresponding to our "Sir" or "Madam." But the student who has perused this chapter with care will be able to judge how amply their absence is made good by the use of verbal and other honorifies. Of titles, that in commonest use is Sama, as in Kami Sama, "a Shintō god or goddess." Shaka Sama, "Buddha" (the Buddha, Shaka Muni). Tenshi Sama, "the Mikado," lit. Son of Heaven."

In speaking of ordinary mortals, Sama is mostly abbreviated to San, which then corresponds to our "Mr.," thus:

Watanabe San, "Mr. Watanabe."

Kāshi* San, "the Minister" (Plenipotentiary).

N. B. Compare such French expressions as Monsieur le Ministre.

Sometimes San is replaced by the Chinese word Kun, lit. "Prince;" thus, Walanabe Kun. This expression is much affected by the young men of the present day whose slang is apt to be of the grandiloquent order. Members of the Diet also habitually refer to each other as so-and >> Kun.

¶ 417. There are no words corresponding to our 'Mrs." and "Miss." These are replaced by such periphrases as Watanabe San no okŭsama. \ '' Mrs. Watanabe " Watanabe San no ojosan. \ '' Miss Watanabe.''

Watanabe Mr. 's young-lady.'

Pan-ya no okamisan. "The baker's wile."

(Instead of mentioning her surname.)

N. B. Such an expression as Watanabe San, though properly meaning "Mr. Watanabe," has come, quite of late years, to be sometimes ^{*} Kōshi, written with different Chinese characters, also means "Confucius.' But he, as an ancient sage, would be Kōshi Sama, not Kōshi Sam.

employed to signify "Mrs." or "Miss Watanabe" in cases where no confusion of persons can arise, ¶ 418. Women's personal names (corresponding to our Christian names) are preceded by the honorific o, and followed by the title San; but the San is omitted in familiar intercourse. Such names are mostly borrowed from graceful natural objects, less often from other sources, thus:

```
O Hana San, (Honourable) "Blossom" (Miss).
O Haru San, "Spring",
O Matsu San, "Pine-tree",
O Sei San, "Pure",
O Take San, "Bamboo",
O Yone San, "Rice",

Honorific o is, however, dropped before such women's names as consist of more than two syllables, thus Kiyoshi (San), Sonoe (San), not O Kiyoshi (San), O Sonoe (San); neither is it employed before surnames or men's personal names (for these see p. 36). Observe that Japanese usage puts the surname first, the personal name last.

¶ 419. It is not usual in Japan, as it is in England, to drop the title of "Mr." between friends. To do so would savour, if not exactly of contempt, at least of that excessive familiarity by which contempt is said to be bred. Officials, however, mostly drop the "Mr." in addressing their subordinates when on duty. This is on account of the halo which surrounds superiority in official rank. No Japanese speaker ever applies the word "Mr." to himself. If, therefore, a friend's servant asks what name he is to announce, the caller must give his name simply as Smith, Brown, or whatever it may be. It would sound conceited were he to speak of himself as Smith San or Brown San.

CHATER XII.

SYNTAX.

- ¶ 420. The fundamental rule of Japanese construction is that qualifying words precede the words they qualify. Thus the adjective or genitive precedes the nonn which it defines, the adverb precedes the verb, and explanatory or dependent clauses precede the principal clause. The object likewise precedes the verb. The predicative verb or adjective of each clause is placed at the end of that clause, the predicative verb or adjective of the main clause rounding off the entire sentence.
 - N. B. The adverb, instead of immediately preceding the verb which it defines, sometimes heads the whole clause.
- ¶ 421. Postpositions, which are words corresponding for the most part to English prepositions and conjunctions, follow the word or clause to which they belong. This seems, at first sight, an infraction of the fundamental rule of Japanese construction as laid down in the preceding paragraph. But the history of the language shows that this apparent exception is really an exemplification of the rule itself. Some of the postpositions were originally verbs, and as such naturally follow their object, e.g. kore¹ ÿori², "than² this¹," "henceforward," lit. "leaning (yori being from the verb yoru, "to lean") on this." Some were nouns, e.g. wa, which meant "thing," "person," so that fune wa, which now means "as for the ship" or simply "the ship," originally meant "ship thing." Fama no ue, "on the mountain," means lit. "the top (u) side (he) of (no) the mountain (yama)." In such cases it is, historically speaking, the noun which qualifies the postposition, not the postposition the noun. Other postpositions again were independent exclamations, each, so to speak, forming a clause by itself. Such is the accusative postposition wo (see ¶ 130, p. 92). Altogether, in every case where the etymology of a postposition is traceable, we find that its position after the noun constitutes no exception to the main rule of construction set forth in ¶ 420.

- ¶ 422. When the verbs of several clauses are intended to express the same tense or mood, it is only the last of these verbs that takes the suffix by which such tense or mood is indicated. The previous verbs all assume the gerundial (or, in the higher style, the indefinite) form. Adjectives assume either the gerundial or the indefinite form. Conf. ¶¶ 278—283 and ¶ 180.
 - $N.\ B.$ This rule, which was formerly inviolable, is now occasionally transgressed.
- ¶ 423. When the verb has a subject, this usually heads the sentence. But most verbs are subjectless, and express rather a coming-to-be with reference to some person than an act explicitly declared to be performed by him. In the absence of a subject, the word on which it is desired to lay most stress is often placed at the beginning of the sentence, and isolated by means of the particle wa. The student should compare with this paragraph what has been said of wa in pp. 85 et seq., and the further discussion of the subjectlessness of Japanese verbs, which will be found in ¶¶ 427, pp. 266—7.
- ¶ 424. The following examples will serve to illustrate the above rules:

N. B. According to the old Japanese calendar, which went by real "moons," not by artificial "months," it would have been a miracle for the moon to come out on the last night of the month, i.e., on the night before new moon.

264 SYNTAX.

¶ 425. Now for a slightly more formal example, specially illustrating the use of the indefinite form in correlated clauses. It is taken from a modern Buddhist sermon:

mukatte 111 Horse to confronting, " Kōkō tsukuse!" 200 "Filial-piety (accus.) exhaust!" ōkami ni mukatte "Chūgi wolf to confronting, "Loyalty wo tsŭkuse!" nado to (accus.) exhaust!" etceteru, thut itta tokoro ga, dekiru suid pluce although, forthcomes rva gozaimasen fact indeed is-not ga,-hito 2012 whereas.person as-for, ze-hi zen-aku 200 good-evil (accus.) vight-wrong zvakatsu chie gadiscern intelligence (nom.) atte, kimi ni chīı 200 being, lord to loyalty (accus.) tsŭkushi, ova 122 exhausting. parent to tsŭkushi, 7800 filial-piety (accus.) exhausting, naka kyōdai rea brethren us-for. intercourse voku, fufu 7*0*2 being-good, spouses us-for. mutsumashiku, hōyū ni being-harmonious, friends to shitashiku, makoto as-for, being-intimate, sincerity 700 motte majiwat-(accus.) taking, having-intercourse indeed, firstly truth no hito to invaremasii. 's person that acts-said.

"Supposing you were to tell a horse to practise filial piety, or a wolf to loyalty, practise animals would not be able to do what you required of But man them. has the intelligence wherewith discern right from good from evil: and he can only then first be said to be truly man, when he practises loyalty towards his master and filial towards his parents. he is affectionate towards his brethren, when he lives harmoniously with wife, when he is amiable towards his friends, and koso, hajimete shin acts sincerely in all social intercourse."

Here the two tsukushi's, yoku, mutsumashiku, and shitashiku—five indefinite forms—must all be rendered by the gerund, because majiwatte the verb of the next clause, with which they are all correlated, is a gerund.

¶ 426. Next we give another passage from the same sermon. illustrating the use of the gerund in correlated clauses, and also, in one instance (sŭkunaku), that of the indefinite form. Sŭkunaku is rendered by the present "are few," because the verb omoimas u at the end of the sentence is in the present tense:--

Kono goro ni itarimashite, period at having-arrived, This Bukkvõ to 222.0.SZ 1110110 that (thev)sau thing Buddhism katō-jimmin 120 tada low-class-people as-for, merely shinzuru tokoro to natte. believing place that having-become, dezυa chūtō 110 middle-class thence-upwurds in as-for, dori 7810 wakimaeteru 50710 reason (accus.) discerning-are its ga sŭkunaku; shūmon hito religionpersons(nom.) are-few; söshiki no toki ieba. that if-one-suys, funeral-rite 's time bakari ni mochiiru koto 20 employ 18 onlu inthing ni omoimasŭ. manner in (they) think.

"At the present day Buddhism has sunk into being the belief of the lower classes only. Few persons in the middle and upper classes understand its raison d'êlre, most of them fancying that religion is a thing which comes into play only at funeral services."

Again take the following:

Hito ka to omoeba, Person? that if-one-thinks, is-not; ghost ? person also omoeba. vurei that if-one-thinks, ahost nai. also is-not.

"One might have taken huo de mo naku; yūrei ka them for human beings; but they were not human beings. de Or else one might have taken them for ghosts; but neither were they ghosts.

266 SYNTAX.

Here the indefinite form naku has exactly the same sense as the final nai; but it is preferred to nai in the first instance, because it merely ends a clause and does not complete a sentence.

For further examples of the correlation of sentences by means of the indefinite form and of the gerund, see pp. 178—181, and also the stories and extracts in the Practical Part passim.

¶ 427. Of all the peculiarities of Japanese syntax, the most puzzling to the foreign student is the already mentioned fact that most sentences are subjectless. It is not that the subject is dropped but still "understood," as so frequently happens in Latin, but that it does not exist at all in the mind of the Japanese speaker. The best way of getting behind this difficulty is to consider the case of passive constructions in our own language. We may say, for instance, "A house in European style has recently been built next door to mine." Now by whom has it been built? The sentence gives no information on this point. The action is affirmed, but no mention is made of any agent. In Japanese it is just the same, with this difference, that the verb used is an active instead of a passive one. English people say "A house has been built (by ?). The Japanese say "(?) has built a house." In strict reason the two assertions are identical; for it is only the grammatical clothing of the thought, not the thought itself, that varies. Thus the example in question, translated into Japanese, would run as follows:

Konaida watakushi no tonari ni seiyō-zŭkuri Recently I of next-door in, European-construction no ie wo talemashita. 's house (accus.) has-built. I.e., "Next door to me, recently (some one) has built a European house."

Again, take such an instance as "I think I'll send these boots to be mended." We do not in English explicitly state who is to do the mending. In Japanese the sentence will run thus:

Kono kutsu voo naoshi ni yarimashō.
These boots (accus.) mend to will-probably-send.

Here the verb naoshi, "mend," is active, but as usual subjectless, so that the wording is, as literally as may be:-"I am going to send the boots (for some one) to mend." The verb yarimasho is subjectless too; but no ambiguity can arise with regard to it. For who, under ordinary circumstances, will trouble himself about any boots but his own? The pronoun "I" is so obviously the one to be supplied that its omission can cause no ambiguity. One specially complicated class of instances, in which two different pronouns must be supplied in the same clause, has been already treated of from other points of view in ¶ 312 and ¶ 404. Let us again take up the last example of ¶ 404, omitting the first unessential words. We thus get Misete1 itadakito2 gozaimasŭ3, lit "to-be3 wishing-toreceive² showing¹," but employed to signify "I-am wishingto-receive your showing," in other words, "I wish you would show me." The Japanese go the length of omitting personal pronouns in almost all cases. The perpetual iteration of "I" and "me," "you," "your," "he," etc., which characterises the languages of the West, would seem to them no less tiresome than superfluous and absurd. The student is referred to almost every page of this Handbook, and more particularly to every page of the Practical Part, for examples of the omission of personal pronouns and of 268 SYNTAX.

the general subjectlessness of verbs. He should also refer to ¶ 71 and to ¶¶ 122—125, in which latter the difficult particle wa, which has a bearing on this point, is treated of.

¶ 428. The relative order of the direct and indirect objects of the verb depends on circumstances. Whichever of the two it is desired to emphasise comes first. In English the same end is often attained by using the word "the" for the more important, and "some" for the less important of the two objects. Thus,

Hilo ni kane wo tsükawasu Person to money (accus.) to-give means "To give the person some money."

Kane wo hito ni tsukawasu means "To give the money to somebody."

¶ 429. Though, properly speaking, every sentence ought to terminate in a verb (or adjective used as a verb), the final verb is often omitted for brevity's sake, when there can be no ambiguity in the meaning, especially in short idiomatic sentences, for instance:

Kore de shimai (desù).
This by, end is.

"This is the last."
(The full form is the politer.)

Chollo haiken (100
A-little respectful-glance (1001) negaimasŭ).

(I) beg.

(200
'' Please just let me look a minute."

Watakŭshi sansei (itashimasŭ). ("I beg to second the seconding do. motion."

Hsu go shukkin (ni) "When does he go to narimasŭ)?" office-yoing to office?"

Makoto ni shibaraku Truth in, some-time

it-has-been.

"Really it is quite a time since we last met."

(This is a set phrase in constant use.)

Taisō ni kirei desŭ to Greaty pretty is that (hito ga iimasŭ.)
people (nom.) say.

Taisō ni kirei desŭ to that ("It is said to be extremely pretty."

This omission of final verbs, though the commonest form of ellipsis, is not the only one. The fondness of the Japanese for long and highly complex sentences (conf. ¶ 442) often lands them in the predicament of not knowing exactly how to finish. The speaker then perforce breaks off either with a gerund (conf. ¶ 410), or the postposition ga (conf. ¶ 287, p. 186), or a concessive form, somewhat as if one should end by "and.." or "but..," through absence of further definitely expressible deas. Thus we get such sentences as

Ie; sō bakari mo gozuimasen keredomo.., No; so only even is-not although, meaning "That is not the only reason." There is some other reason behind; but the speaker either does not care to explain it, or does not exactly know how best to set to work to do so.

¶ 430. As in the case of verbs only the last of a set of correlated verbs takes the suffix denoting the tense or mood which is common to them all, so also in the case of nouns it is only the last of a set of nouns that takes the postposition common to all. Thus:

N. B. The word "etc." might be dropped from the English translation, as nado is often absolutely meaningless.

O cha to kwashi

Honourable tea and cakes

zvo motte koi.
(accus.) having-carried come.

Mo (with any other postposition which may precede it) is, however, suffixed to every noun of a set, thus:—

Ryūkyū ni mo, Chôsen ni mo. \ "Both in Luchu and Luclu in also, Korea in also. \ in Korea."

¶ 431. Inversion of the regular order of words is rare. It occurs for the most part only when a word or clause which ought to have been inserted in an earlier portion of the sentence, has been forgotten, and is therefore perforce brought in at the end. From such forgetfulness result phrases like the following, which not infrequently occur in conversation:

Sono okamisan, jishin to ieba, mas-That married-woman, carthquake that if-one-say, perfectlysao ni naru,—kowagatte. green to becomes,—being-frightened.

It should, properly speaking, run thus:

Sono okamisan,* jishin ''Mrs. (so-and-so) is so to ieba, kowagatte, massao frightened of earthquakes, that ni naru. (more politely narimasŭ.) she turns green at the bare mention of them."

Again:

Naka-naka hi nando ni alatcha iraremasen,— Positively! fire etectera at as-for-touching, (1)cannot-be, goran no tōri, isogi no yō desŭ kara. august-glunce 's way, hurry 's business is because.

^{*} If a lady is meant, then say okŭsama, not okamisan. Conf. middle of p. 256.

This sentence should, properly speaking, be

Goran no tōri, isogi no yō desŭ kara, naka-naka hi nando ni atatcha irare-masen. "I am, as you see, far too busy to be able to sit quiet, warming my hands at the fire."

In familiar conversation, occasional inversion, such as is here instanced, may perhaps be thought to add liveliness and variety to the expression. But it would hardly be considered appropriate in a set speech. In Japan as elsewhere, however, usage sanctions a few special locutions which seem to run counter to the general rules of the language, for instance, the placing of the adverb after its verb in phrases like Ima kita bakari, which is more idiomatic than Ima bakari kita, "He has just come."

¶ 432. Negatives destroy each other, as in English, thus:

Nai koto wa nai.
Not-is fact as-for, is-not.

Not-is koto wa nai. fact as-for, is-not.

"It is not a fact that there are none," i.e., "There are some."

Kō shinakereba narimasen. { "It won't do not to do thus," i.e., "It must be done in this way."

N. B. Such mutually destructive negatives are very frequently used, the practice having been apparently borrowed from the Chinese.

Occasionally the Japanese employ a negative where we should employ a positive construction, for instance in such phrases as Ano hito no konai mae, lit. "Before that person's not coming," but signifying simply "Before he comes" (or came). The train of thought here seems to be that, before a man comes, he of course cannot have come yet, and similarly in other cases.

¶ 433. Japanese has no negative pronouns, adverbs, or conjunctions, such as the English words "nobody," "nothing," "none," "never," "nowhere," "neither... nor," etc. Their absence is supplied by the negative voice of the verb or adjective, combined with positive pronouns and other positive words. Thus, for the English "I know nothing," a Japanese will say Na(n)ni¹ mo² shiranai², "(I) know-not² anything¹,²,"—more literally (so far as the grammatical expression is concerned), "I ignore everything." For "There are none to be had anywhere," he will say Doko¹ ni² mo² gozaimasen¹, "Everywhere¹,²,² (more lit. even³ in² where¹) are-non-existent⁴. The following examples will serve to illustrate the manner in which the various kinds of English negative and quasi-negative assertions, and other kindred idioms, are expressed in Japanese:—

Dare mo shiranai. (familiar)

- ¶ 434. The difficulty of using negative constructions correctly will disappear as soon as the learner clearly grasps the fact that in Japanese the negative and the verb are not conceived of as two separate ideas, as is mostly the case in European languages, but as a single idea. Even in European languages, however, there is no lack of parallels to this Japanese idiom. Thus "to disapprove," for "not to approve;" "to disregard," for "not to regard;" "impossible," for "not possible," etc., etc.
 - N. B. Custom limits the use of the word sŭkunai (vulg. sŭkenai), "few," to predicative constructions, as instanced in two or three of the examples in the preceding section. Thus we can only render the phrase "Few people know" by Shitteru hito wa sŭkunai (more politely sŭkunō gozaimasŭ), lit. "The knowing people are few," never by Sŭkunai hito wa shitteru. The same remark applies to the kindred adjective δi , "many." The sole case in which the words $s\check{n}kunai$ and δi can be used attributively is in relative clauses, for instance:

Nandemo, shina no siikunai Anything-whatever, article 's scarce toki wa, ne ga takō gozaimasii. is expensive when it is time as-for. price (nom.)dear is.

Kyō wa, kisha ni nori-te ga
To-day as-for, train in, riders (nom.)

ōi kara, yohodo konzatsu bustle at the train to-day, many because, plentifully confusion shimashita.

did.

It may perhaps be thought that as toki means "when," and kara means "because," the construction is not an attributive one even here. It is so, however, from the Japanese point of view, toki being even now apprehended as a noun signifying "time," and kara also having almost certainly been a noun in the archaic period of the language.

¶ 435. In Japanese almost all quotation, whether of the words of others or of the speaker's own thoughts, is direct. The manifold shiftings of person, mood, and tense, which are brought about in European languages by the use of indirect quotation, are consequently unknown. Thus a Japanese, when mentioning the plans of an absent friend, does not say "He said he would be back by Sunday;" but he repeats his friends exact words, and says: "He said that: 'I shall be back by Sunday.'" In Japanese the phrase would run as follows:

"Nichiyō made kaeru" to imashita.
"Sunday till, (I)will-return." that (he) said.

N. B. The word to, "that," cannot be omitted in such contexts. Compare also to, \P 117, p. 82.

One alteration does, however, commonly occur in quotations,—an alteration affecting the honorifics. For instance, you say to me O^1 ide^2 $nasai^3$, lit. "Deign³ honourable¹ exit2," i.e., "Please come." Now, if I am repeating this remark of yours to a third person, my modesty naturally prevents me from applying honorifics to myself, even within quotation marks. I therefore express the idea "He asked me to come "thus:

Watakŭshi ni "Koi!" to iimashita, or Watakŭshi ni kuru vo ni iimashita (conf. next ¶), employing the corresponding non-honorific verb kuru, "to come," in lieu of the honorific o ide nasaru. So persistently inherent in the Japanese habit of speech is the tendency to give honour to others, and to abase self.

¶ 436. The sole kind of indirect quotation ever employed by the Japanese is a locution with the present tense and the words $v\bar{v}^1 ni^2$, lit. "in the manner"." thus:

Kitto yō Positively come manner in that, to be sure to come." itte koi. so having-said come.

m to \ "Go and tell him (Said to an inferior in speaking of another inferior.)

Kuru yō ni to itte Come manner in that (I) said ga, - muko de do shite but he said it was absothough, -opposite at, how doing (lutely impossible for him mo korarenai to iimasu. even, cannot-come that says

"I told him to come: to do so."

N. B. To may be omitted after yō ni.—Notice the word mukō in the last example, and consult p. 48, line 6, for it.

The phraseology of the above examples is not polite. That of the next is extremely so:

Daiji m nasaru Carefully deign-to-do manner ni yoku osshatte kudasaimashi.

"Please be so kind as to tell him to take great care of himself."

descend.

Somewhat similar in character to the above are such phrases as Yosasō ni omoimasŭ. al think it looks as if it Good-appearance in (1) think. would do."

¶ 437. Notwithstanding the example given at the beginning of the preceding paragraph (Kitto kuru yō ni to sō itte koi), the Japanese generally avoid such phrases containing one command within another. Thus, rather than say "Tell O Haru to come here," they will mostly prefer the simpler expression "Call O Haru," viz.

O Haru wo yonde koi!
O-Haru (accus.) having-called come!
or more politely

O Haru wo yonde kudasai!
O-Haru (accus.) calling condescend!

Rather than say "Tell Jiro to get the jinrikisha ready for me at twelve o'clock," they will use the causative and say:

Fū-ni-ji ni deru kara, firō ni kuruma no shī-Twolvo-o'elock at, go-out because, Jirō to, jinrikisha 's pretaku wo sashite oku ga ii. parations (accus.) having-caused-to-do to-place (nom.) is-good.

I.e., as literally as may be, "As I am going out at twelve o'clock, it will be well to cause Jirō to make preparations for the jinrikisha."—Similarly, "Tell him to wait" becomes "Cause him to wait." Matashite kudasai.

In still more complicated cases, the difficulty is often turned by omitting one whole clause. Thus, where an English servant would say "My master told me to tell you, Sir, that he particularly wishes to see you," a Japanese servant will more briefly say "My master said that he particularly wishes to see you." In Japanese the sentence would run thus:

Shujin ga zehi o ai-mōshǐtai to Muster (nom.) positively honourably "(1) wish-to-meet" that mōshimashĭta.

said.

N. B. Do not misinterpret the word $m\bar{o}sh\bar{u}tai$ as signifying "wants to say." O ai- $m\bar{o}sh\bar{u}tai$ is simply a very polite equivalent for aitai, the desiderative adjective of au, "to meet." See ¶ 402, p. 249.

On the other hand, Japanese constructions with quotations are often pleonastic, some such formula as "he said" being used both before and after the words quoted, instead of once only, as is the case in English. The following example, taken from Dr. Katō's lecture given later on in this volume, will show what we mean:

Doitsu no tetsugakŭsha SchopenGermany's philosopher Schopenhauer to iu hito no iuta kotoba hauer that say person's said words forthcomes-not" thut (he) said.

"The German philosopher Schopenhauer has said: 'Religion is like a firefly. It can shine only in dark places' [is what he said]."

- ¶ 438. Interrogation is not denoted, as in European languages, by an inversion of the usual construction. The construction remains the same, but the interrogative particle ka is generally added. (See p. 68.)
- ¶ 439. Passive constructions are very sparingly used, and when used, their grammar is peculiar (see p. 198 et seq; also pp. 57—58, 204, and 216). The passive is almost always replaced by the subjectless active construction explained in pp. 266—267, or else by an intransitive construction, as explained in pp. 204—5 and pp. 190—1. Thus, to give one or two additional examples, a Japanese will not say "As has already been explained." He will say "As (I) have already explained," Sude ni toki-akashimashita tori. Already (I) have-explained way.

He will not say "It has been notified by the Department," but "A notification has issued from the Department,"

Yakusho kara tasshi ga demashita.
Office from, notification (nom.) has-come-out.

¶ 440. Inanimate objects are rarely, if ever, personified. Not only does Japanese idiom eschew all such fanciful anthropomorphic expressions as "the hand of Time," "old Father Christmas," "the spoilt child of Fortune," "Nature's abhorrence of a vacuum," etc., etc.; but it goes so far as almost to prohibit the use of the name of any inanimate thing as the subject of a transitive verb. For instance, a Japanese will not say "The rain delayed me," thus appearing to attribute an action to those inanimate things, the drops of rain; but he will turn the phrase intransitively, thus:

Ame no lame ni ōi ni osoku narimashila. Rain 's sake in, greatly late (I) have-become.

I.e., "I am very late on account of the rain."

Similarly it will not come into his head to employ such a phrase as "His diligence surprises me." He will say:

Ano hilo no benkyō ni wa kanshin shimasii. That person's diligence at, admiring-astonishment (I) do.

I.e., "I feel astonishment at his diligence."

¶ 441. Thus no language lends itself less to the imaginative and mythopœic faculty than does Japanese. When, for instance, a European speaks of "the strife between Religion and Science," he very likely spells these names with a capital R and a capital S, and unconsciously slides into regarding them as being, in some sort, actual things, even individualities capable of aspirations, aims, and conquests, of teaching and sustaining their devotees, of revenging themselves on those who slight them, etc., etc. Such mythology (for mythology it is, albeit those who have been reared under the exclusive influence of European modes of expression may not at first recognise it as such) is utterly alien to the matter-of-fact Far-Eastern mind. During the last few years, the study of English, and the translation into Japanese of great numbers of English and other European books, have indeed resulted in the occasional adoption by public speakers of such expressions as Rekishi ga watakushi-domo niwo oshieru, a literal rendering of our phrase "History teaches us that..... " But such "Europeanisms" are quite unidiomatic, and would scarcely be comprehended by any Japanese save those who have themselves at least a tincture of Western learning.

¶ 442. Languages differ greatly in the degree of integration of their sentences. For instance, Chinese and Pidjin-English simply put assertions side by side, like stones without cement, as "He bad man. My no like he." Our more synthetic English would generally subordinate one assertion to the other, coupling them thus: "I don't like him, BECA USE he is a bad man." Now one of the most essential characteristics of the Japanese language is the extreme degree to which it pushes the synthetic tendency in the structure of sentences. Japanese always tries to incorporate the whole of a statement, however complex it may be and however numerous its parts, within the limits of a single sentence, whose members are all mutually inter-dependent. In fact the normal Japanese sentence is a paragraph, or (so to say) an organism, as much more complicated than the typical English sentence just quoted, as the English sentence is more complicated than the Chinese or the Pidjin-English. As an illustration, let us take the following anecdote, the first paragraph of which forms but one sentence in Japanese, though it may be conveniently broken up into four or five in English:—

¶ 443. HEMPŌ-GAESHI.¹

¶ 444. The integration of sentences, as illustrated in the foregoing example, is secured by the application of the rule of syntax which was set forth in ¶ 422, p. 261, and illustrated in pp. 264-6, and which is here exemplified in the word shite; furthermore by the incorporation of quotations, and by the use of such particles as kara ("because") and ga ("whereas") and of the conditional and concessive moods of verbs and adjectives. In translating a Japanese sentence into idiomatic English it is generally necessary to break it at each of these hinges, as they may perhaps be termed.

Such naga-ya as remain are now mostly let out in sets of two or three rooms to poor families .- 4 Tsumazukimashitara would be the more strictly Colloquial form of this word; but see p. 184.-5 Hito wo baka ni suru means "to make a fool of a person:" but here of course hito ga is the subject of the verb, and the object is left unexpressed.—6 Aitata! is the same as aita! at the top of p. 237.—7 Otonashiku, more lit. like a grown-up person." It qualifies the verb iimashita at the end of the sentence.—8 Ishi ka, "perhaps a stone." Taken more literally still, the words ishi ka are a direct quotation of the speaker's thoughts: "Is it a stone?" i.e., "May it not perhaps be a stone?"

8. Conf. p. 268.—9. Properly speaking, this phrase should come in the middle of a sentence; but in familiar conversation it often begins one. For ga = "but," see p. 67. The u of $des\tilde{u}$ is pronounced before ga, for which reason we print it in this context without the mark of short quantity.—10. For miru auxiliary, see p. 193.—11 and 12. The Japanese habitually use "how?" for "what?" in such phrases as these. For $h\bar{o}$ see p. 144.—13. For $irasshaimas\tilde{u}$, substitute $ikimas\tilde{u}$ in speaking to an inferior.—14. For $nasaimash\tilde{t}ta$ substitute $shimash\tilde{t}ta$, or still less politely $sh\tilde{t}ta$, in speaking to an inferior.—15. See p. 247.—16. See p. 247.—19. This idiom may be explained thus: "There is not even enough to make it worth asking how much there is."—30. For the construction itsu no, conf. p. 232.—31. A phrase used chiefly by women of the lower class.—32. Kagen is originally one of the "syntheses of contradictories" noticed on p. 34, ka meaning "increase" (of bodily well-being), and gen "decrease."—33. Kare kore is an idiom expressive of approximation, like our "more or less," "pretty well,"—34. The English word "a cold" cannot be translated more literally into Japanese.—35. Miru, "to see," here has rather its proper signification, than the auxiliary use explained on p. 193. Moreover the conditional here has the sense of "when...;" see p. 184.

Kikashite should, strictly speaking, be kikasete, but see N. B. to p. 214.—38. Observe how Japanese prefers the intransitive to the transitive construction, of which "it" is the subject in English, and conf. p. 279 for this marked feature of the language.—41. The use of the past, where the present would seem to us more natural, is idiomatic here. 42. (Said in asking for something.)

^{66.} We may explain this phrase thus: "It has come to this, that all are gone."—67. This phrase is used only when the necessity is genuine and strong; conf. N. B. at top of p. 175.—68. More literally, "What o'clock is it already becoming?"—69 and 70. Supply dest. 72. A highly elliptical phrase, somewhat as if one were to say "It is all right without it."—73. Good morning.

I think I must be going.

By your kind influence.

74. Makeru is literally "to lose" (a battle or a game), hence "to come down in price." - 75. For the syntax of double negatives, see p. 271.—77. Nan de mo, though representing the English word "anything," is not the subject of the sentence. The sentence is subjectless, and nan de mo is an indirect object corresponding to the Latin ablative denoting causation or instrumentality.—82. It is of course absurd to use this phrase, as foreigners sometimes do, in the afternoon.

I feel hungry.

I should like to go with you.

Show the guest in.

85. After sama one may insert the word de, "by," which strict logic and grammar would require. Naorimashite gozaimasii is more polite than simple naorimashita would be,—86. "Reflection's top" is, after all, not so very different from our phrase "on reflection." Instead of saying "an answer yes or no," the Japanese phrase mentions the negative only.—89. Still more polite than the preceding number. For mōsu as a humble auxiliary, see p. 249.—90. For o naka, see p. 248.

It is frightfully dear.

We had a good laugh over it.

92. The use of $m\bar{o}se$ here shows that a person who is your inferior is to do something for one politely considered your superior.—93. I.e., "Don't take trouble about it; but, should the occasion offer... etc."—94. It is optional to omit the termination mashi in all such cases.—95. Conf. ¶ 218.—96. As if one should say, "I have come in for a great deal of your help." $\bar{O}ki$ m means "greatly;" $\bar{o}kiku$ means "big(ly)."—100. In strict grammar we should have osoroshiku, not osoroshii; but see first N. B. on p. 124. As shown by this example and the last, the Japanese turn in quite a different manner our exclamatory phrases beginning with "what" and "how."—101. Mon' is familiar for mono.

103. Deshita might be omitted without mutilating either the sense or the grammar; but the Japanese like thus to round off the sentence with an auxiliary verb, if possible; conf. p. 197.—104. Conf. pp. 234-5.—109. More literally "One cannot know whether it is so." In vulgar parlance the phrase often runs thus: $S\bar{o}$ ka shira (for shiran.)—110. See bottom of p. 265 for a similar construction.—111. More lit. "It won't do, if you do that."—112. Or $S\bar{o}$ de gozainasen.

125. To mo kaku mo is an idiom meaning "at any rate," "in any case."—127. A good example of the ambiguous relative phrases discussed in ¶ 82, p. 58. It is not the thing that does not understand, but I who cannot understand the thing.—130. To mo final = "of course;" conf. p. 85.

136. This sentence illustrates a large number of cases containing the idea "it is fortunate that..." The final deslitta may be omitted at will.—139. Japanese idiom requires ni in such phrases, when the adjective of probability (...sō na) is turned into an adverb by the fact of a verb following.—140. It will be something to talk about.

There is a good deal of shade in many places; so I shall begin to think of going out.

A good many cherryblossoms have begun to come out in the garden; so I suppose Mukōjima will just be at its best about next Sunday.

^{1.} For a good example of a similar construction with no, see p. 76, end of ¶ 110—2 For to in, see p. 58 and p. 82.—4. Lit. "talk's seed."—5. The auxiliary kimashita makes the phrase paint or photograph, as it were, the gradual oncoming of the shade. Simple natta would be a very flat substitute for compound natte kimashita; conf. p. 197. 6. For kakeru see p. 219. Mukājima is a part of Tōkyō celebrated for its avenue of cherry-trees. Observe the manner in which the two clauses are connected by kara,—lit. "because the cherry-trees have partially blossomed, etc."

I have lain down, but I can't get to sleep,—I am so terribly bothered by the mosquitoes.

It looks like rain; so I think I will give up (the idea of the excursion, etc.).

It has come on to rain hard. Still, as it is only a thunder-shower, I suppose the sky will soon clear up again.

I was so dull all by myself, that I got quite sleepy.

If there are no good ones, I won't take any of any kind.

Why didn't you do as I ordered you?

7. $D\bar{o}$ ka k \bar{o} ka is an idiom meaning "somehow or other," "by hook or by crook." If for dekimasi were substituted dekimash \bar{o} , the phrase would signify "I think we shall be able," etc.—8. Kippu, "a ticket," takes the auxiliary numeral mai, because a ticket is a flat thing; see p. 109.—11. For akarimash \bar{o} , many prefer to say agarimash \bar{o} , "it will probably lift."—13. For no ga, conf. ¶ 112 and ¶ 137.—14. $D\bar{o}$ sh \bar{o} ta mon' da? here translated "why?" would be more literally rendered by "what sort of conduct is (this)?"

Very little of that sort of thing goes on nowadays; and even supposing there to be instances of its occurrence, it doesn't suit the spirit of the age.

We are getting on in the season, and so the mornings and evenings have become cool.

I understand the Kana a little, but I can't read the Chinese characters.

^{15.} Iki-nari, "abruptly," "disconnectedly."—17. Siikunai, is always predicative, as here; see pp. 274-5. But it is generally convenient to reverse, as has here been done, the order of the ideas, when translating a clause containing siikunai into English. Yoshi, the conclusive form (see pp. 121-2) of the adjective yoi, "good," is here used as an exclamation, but forms from the grammatical point of view a sentence by itself. To shita tokoro ga is an idiom meaning "granting that..."—18. Gara, suffixed to a noun, indicates "kind," "nature," here "cause," very much like the postposition kara, "because," of which it is probably but a nigori'ed form.—19. Kana, see p. 9. Notice the force of the two wa's, acting like Greek ner and Sé: "As for the Kana, I understand it a little; but as for the Chinese ideographs, I can't read them at all." A European's instinct would probably lead him to use the accusative particle wo in this place, instead of wa. Notice how the Japanese construction omits both the nominative "I" and the accusatives "it" and "them."—21. Lit., "in doing practice, it will probably be good if one had begun in what sort of manner?"—22. Lit., "as for the place of decision, etc."—24. For the important subject of the rendering of indirect quotations, see p. 275 ct seq., and especially ¶ 436 for the idiom in this phrase.—28. How many years' study do you think would enable one to talk?

^{29.} More lit. "As for the abutment-place opposite to this, where is it?"—32. Aru ni wa arimash, "as for their existing, they exist," is an emphatic construction; see p. 88. Any verb may be so used for emphasis' sake.—33. Oku is auxiliary; conf. p. 194.—34. Conf. p. 196 for this peculiar construction with the conditional.—35. Instead of moshi, one may say go men nasai, "deign to pardon me," or chotto ukagaimash, "I just enquire."—36. More lit. "there is no way of calling it even what?"—37. Our phrase "it would seem that," or the adverb "apparently," is generally thus rendered by the gerundial construction to miete, the sentence being reversed, and another clause being necessary to clinch it.—38. Lit. "If I did about how many years' study, will it probably become to the forthcoming of talking?"

Have you got a passport?

—Yes, I have.

Are you going in evening clothes, Sir?—No, my frock-coat will do well enough.

Are you going to change your clothes, Sir?—No, I shall remain as I am, except that I will put on a better coat.

Many thanks for the beautiful present you made me the other day.

Oh! pray don't mention it. It was really such rubbish, that it was quite rude of me to offer it to you.

8. Ryokō may be omitted. The answer to this question is rather high-flown. In simpler parlance it would be He! motte orimasu.q. In Chinese en = " swallow," hi = " tail," fiku = " clothes." de naku mo, "even without that." Furokku-koto is the nearest approach to "frock-coat," of which Japanese organs are capable.—10 Meshi-mono is a very polite term for clothes, used chiefly by servants in addressing their masters. Yoi ho="the good one," or "a better one," "my best one." Observe the simple non-honorific kaevā, used by the master in addressing his servant. Between friends it would be kacmasho; and the servant in the question uses the still more honorific periphrasis o ki kae nasaimasii.-11. (Answer.) It is the rule to use some such depreciatory phrase as this in speaking of a present made by oneself to another. The self-depreciation does not sound at all excessive to Japanese ears. For the de in somatsu na mono de, see p. 138, ¶ 200 ct seq. This method of correlating sentences must be carefully studied .- 12. When there is no bell, as in all old-fashioned Japaneses houses, the visitor cries out O tane' mēshimasŭ as in No. 14. The servant here says simply taku, rather than o taku, in order to avoid applying honorifies to any one connected with the family he himself belongs to, even though it be the lady of the house herself. 12. (Visitor rings the bell, and servant appears.)

The potential mōsarcmashīta at the end is more polite than plain mōsu would be; see ¶ 403, p. 250.—14. The mi of tanomi is often dropped for brevity's sake. Persons who are not scrupulous about politeness cry out simply "Tanomu." These little dialogues instance the use of so many honorific idioms, that it might be well to read through the Chapter on Honorifics, p. 244 et seq., in connection with them.

TRANSLATION.

I. THE POST.—Have no letters come this morning? No, none have come.

I can't make it out! Why, there ought to be an answer to the letter I sent to Yokohama yesterday morning.

2. An Exhibition.—Is there to be an exhibition at Ueno this year also?

I don't know. I have not heard the slightest rumour on the subject.

3. A REQUEST.—If you can manage it, do please copy this by to-night.

O! really, that is quite impossible.

4. Engaging a Teacher.—Please look out for a good teacher for me.

As soon as I find one, I will bring him to you.

5. SALARY.—How much salary should I give a month (e.g., to a teacher or clerk)?

Well, I should say that $14 or $15 would be ample.

henji. The sentence is incomplete; but such incomplete sentences ending in ga are of frequent occurrence, the speaker not knowing exactly what to add; conf. p. 186.—2. Ikaga deshō ka is more or less equivalent to "I don't know;" see ¶ 375, p. 235.

6. Meal Hours.—Kochira de wa, gozen no jikoku wa, nan-ji to nan-ji desŭ ka?

He! O hiru wa jū-ni-ii han de, o yashoku ga shichi-ji han de gozaimasŭ.

Sore de wa, asa-han wa ?

He! asa wa, kimari ga gozaimasen. Anata no go tsugō shidai.

7. An Enquiry.—Moshi! uke-tsŭke wa, kochira desŭ ka?

Hei! koko wo massugu ni o ide m naru to, sugu soko desŭ.

8. Anothe Enquiry.—Koko kara Fuji ga mieru to wa, honto desŭ ka ?

Mā! mieru to mosu koto de gozaimasu.

9. Talking to a Child.—Sā, botchan! koko ye o kake nasai. O otonashii koto! O ikutsu desŭ ka? Vatsu.

Taisō ōkii koto! Gakkō ye o kayoi desŭ ka P

He! mainichi ikimasu ga,—kyō wa, doyōbi desŭ kara, o hiru-giri deshŭta.

10. Talking to a Father.—Kono ko wa, anala no go shisoku de gozaimasŭ ka β

He! watakŭshi no soryo de gozaimasŭ.

Sore wa, taisō o rippa na go shisoku wo o mochi nasaimashĭte, sazo o tanoshimi de gozaimashō.

Ie! domo, wampaku de komarimasŭ.

^{6.} Jū-ni-ji han de: notice how de, used predicatively, correlates this clause with the next; conf. ¶ 200, p. 138, and the fourth and fifth examples on p. 139. After asa-han wa, supply itsu de gozaimasŭ? After shidai, supply de gozaimasŭ.—7. For koko wo, conf. p. 232.—8. To wa stands for to iu koto wa, "the assertion that Fuji can," etc.—

6. Meal Hours.—What are the hours for meals here?

Luncheon is at half-past twelve, and dinner at half-past seven.

Then what about breakfast?

Breakfast? There is no fixed time for it, Sir. You can have it whenever convenient to yourself.

- 7. An Enquiry.—Please, is this the enquiry office?
- No; but you will come to it in a minute, if you go straight on.
- 8. Another Enquiry.—Is it true that Fuji can be seen from here?

Well, it is supposed to be.

9. TALKING TO A CHILD.—Here, my little man! sit down here. What a good boy you are! How old are you? Eight.

How big you are for your age! Do you go to school?

Yes, I go there every day. But to-day we only had lessons till noon, because it is Saturday.

10. Talking to a Father.—Is this little boy your son?

Yes, he is my eldest.

Indeed, you have a fine fellow for an eldest son. What a a source of happiness he must be to you!

Oh! no indeed. He is so nanghty, I don't know what to do.

These and similar complimentary speeches are in constant use, and do not sound absurd in Japanese, though the faults apologised for on both sides are generally quite imaginary. After shikkei supply itashimashita. After koso supply de gozaimashita. Apropos the sentence

THE TELEGRAPH.—It is inconvenient—isn't it?—there being no telegraph in this part of the country, on account of its being so out-of-the-way.

Yes. But I suppose we shall have it in time.

12. Speaking Japanese Well.—You speak Japanese beautifully.

Nonsense! How can you say such a thing? My Japanese is very poor indeed.

Not a bit of it. How can you say so? You really speak splendidly.

13. No Thoroughfare.—It seems that the thoroughfare is closed, because the bridge over there is undergoing repairs.

Ah yes! That is why they have put up a temporary bridge here.

14. Compliments on Meeting A Friend.—I beg your pardon for having been so rude to you in the street the other day.

Oh! no, not at all! It was I who was rude. Where did you go after we parted?

15. A Message.—Hasn't the messenger whom I sent some time ago, come back yet? What is he doing? He is a tremendous time about it.

Probably it is because the gentleman you sent him to is out, so that the messenger is kept waiting.

Yes, indeed. It is lucky for all of us.

Are you going to Kobe?

No. I am going on to Nagasaki.

What do you say to our going and having a pipe in the smoking-room?

All right, come along!

18. A Picnic.—As it is fine weather to-day, we are going to Ōjigoku for the sake of a little exercise. So please make haste, and put up something or other as luncheon for three.

All right, Sir. What liquors shall I send?

Liquors?—A bottle of beer, a bottle of whisky, and two bottles of soda-water, will be enough.

All right, Sir.

19. A VISITOR.—It would seem that the visitor who has just arrived has not dined yet. So please give him something to eat. Anything that happens to be ready will do.

Oh! very many thanks, Sir.

21. Compliments on First Meeting.—This is the first time I have had the honour to meet you, Sir. My name is Tanaka Tsunemasa. I beg for your kind friendship.

Oh! indeed? I have had the honour to hear of you before, although (we have never met). My name is Smith. Henceforward I hope you will honour me with your intimacy.

22. TAKING LEAVE OF A FRIEND.—I have paid you an unconscionably long visit, and must now be taking my leave.

Oh! Why hurry so? Do please chat a little longer.

Many thanks, but I am rather pressed for time to-day. I will call again soon.

Must you really go? Well, pray excuse the shortcomings of my imperfect hospitality, and remember that I count upon your visiting me again very soon.

^{23.} Sate="well!" Dan-dan, "gradually," which serves to show how long-continued your favours have been, is a word constantly thus used in polite speeches. After makoto ni must be supplied some such clause as that which we have translated by "I am ashamed of myself." "Result" is not actually in the original expression; but the idea is more or less pointed at.—24. Akemashite refers to the "open-

23. THANKS FOR ASSISTANCE RECEIVED.—I am very much indebted to you for all your kind assistance on this occasion.

Not at all! I am really ashamed of myself for having done so little. Anyhow, I congratulate you on the result.

24. New Year Congratulations.—I beg to offer you my congratulations on the New Year.

The same to you. I trust that you will continue to me throughout the present year those favours by which I have profited in so many ways during the year that has just closed.

25. An Earthquake.—Did you feel the earthquake a few hours ago?

No, I didn't feel it at all.

Indeed? It was very violent. It was such that the flower-vase there in the alcove shook so that it seemed likely to fall.

Then it must indeed have been a severe earthquake. About what o'clock did it take place?

I looked at my watch at the time, and it was twenty minutes past one.

Ah, I see. In that case I was bound not to feel it. As I left Tsŭkiji at one o'clock, and went in a iinrikisha, it doubtless took place while I was on the road.

^{26.} Ueno and Asakusă are districts in Tōkyō, the Ginza is a street, and the "Imperial" a large hotel in European style. Notice the correlation of clauses in the first sentence by means of the gerund repeated several times. The clause tazumeru hito ga aru kara is inverted; it should properly precede the words kaeri ni immediately above.—27. Learn this example thoroughly by heart, parse it, and

26. HIRING A JINRIKÏSHA.—Fare. I say, jürikǐ-man! I want to go to the Museum at Ueno, you know,—from there on to see the Public Garden at Asakŭsa, then to make some purchases in the Ginza on the way back, and to return again here to the station. How much will you go for?

Jinrikisha-man. Shall you be long about it, Sir?

Fare. No, probably not; for I intend to be back by dusk.

Jinrikisha-man. Well then, Sir, I must ask seventy-five cents.

Fare. H'm. Isn't that rather dear?

finrikisha-man. No, Sir; I haven't named at all a high price, for the distance is very great.

Fare. All right, then; I will give you that much. So just look in at the Imperial Hotel on the way back, as I have some one to call on there. But that won't take long.

Jinrikisha-man. All right, Sir. Please step in.

27. Letters for the Mail.—I say O-Haru! tell some one to carry these letters to the post-office. The messenger must have the one which is addressed in Japanese characters registered, and must get a receipt for it; but in the case of those written in Roman letters, it will be enough if he sticks a ten cent stamp on each, and just drops them into the post-box, as they are to go abroad.

All right, Sir.

analyse it, and you will have laid the foundations of a practical mastery of that most difficult portion of Japanese grammar the integration of sentences, which is treated of at the end of the Chapter on Syntax, pp. 280-2. Shira is a familiar abbreviation of shiran.

28. For dokoro see p. 43. Nazo, properly "etcetera," usually tones down a little the force of the preceding word. We have tried to represent this by the term "for instance" in the English version. Mura, ("village") has for its auxiliary numeral the word son, which is but the Chinese synonym of the word mura; hence rok-ka-son="six villages." For the sense of taishita, and its exclusively attributive use, see p. 141

28. Nearing Yokohama.—I see quite a number of islands out there. What islands are they?

They are the Seven Isles of Izu. The one in front is called Ōshima ("Vries Island").

Indeed! I wonder whether there are any people living on it?

People living on it? I should just think there were! Why! Small as it looks from here, Vries Island has a volcano in the middle, round the base of which cluster no less than six villages. The other islands too, though doubtless some are uninhabited, mostly have people living on them.

Dear me! You don't say so!

29. A CHRISTIAN CHURCH.—There is said to be a large number of (Protestant) Christians in this town,—isn't there?

Yes. Most of the people in this neighbourhood are Christians.

Is there a church?

Well, hitherto the mayor's villa has done duty as a church. But it is too small, and so they are erecting a new building on another site.

Is the pastor a foreigner?

Yes; he comes and preaches every Sunday. It is said that great numbers of people have been baptised recently.

Indeed! Then Christianity is in a very fair way here.

and top of p. 142.—29. Were Roman Catholics intended, the term Tenshukyō would be used instead of Yaso-shū, and Tenshu-dō for kwaidō. The zema in tezema is the stem form of the adjective semai, "narrow." "Going to official business" is shukkin; to any other, shutchō or shusseki. Naka-naka na koto, "a considerable thing."

^{30.} The "intimation" (shirase) of a distant fire, that is, of one not in the same district of the city, consists of two strokes of the fire-bell. Mōshimasũ ni wa="he says." The words sappari miemasen are a quotation from the other man, and sō desũ nearly="he says,"—the Japanese construction thus being pleonastic, as it contains the equivalent of "he says" both before and after the words quoted; conf. latter part of ¶ 437, p. 278.—31. Kabuki-za is the name of the chief theatre in Tōkyō. Gedai, "title," is said to be a corruption of gedai, lit, "list of

30. A Fire.—Halloo! there would seem to be a fire; they are ringing the fire-bell. However, as it is only the "notice-bell," it is all right. Still, please go and see in what direction the fire is Well, Sir! a man who came in a minute ago says there is nothing to be seen. Probably it is in one of the suburbs.

31. The Theatre.—I hear that the Kabuki-za Theatre has recently re-opened. What is being acted there?

On enquiring yesterday at a friend's house, I learnt that it was The Forty-Seven Rōnins,—the entire play,—and that most of the best actors are taking part in it.

Indeed? That is a good piece. Doubtless it will be a great success.

32. EARLY TO BED.—Although it is very rude of me to do so, I must ask you to excuse me if I go to bed, as I intend to start very early to-morrow morning.

Oh! pray retire without paying attention to me. I must positively finish this writing to-night. So probably I shall not get to bed till late, and therefore please excuse me if I wish you a prosperous journey now, as I don't know whether I shall have the honour to see you in the morning.

accomplishments." For the story of the Forty-seven Rōnins, a little epic of loyalty and revenge, see Mitford's "Tales of Old Japan." Its Japanese title,—Chū-shin-gura,—well describes it; for the tale is indeed a "store" of the feelings and deeds of "loyal retainers."—32. The first sentence is inverted; the clause beginning with myōchō wa should, properly speaking, come first. The last sentence lacks some such final verb as o ide nasaimashī. The phrase go kigen yō is often thus used where we should say "goodbye."

33. Difficulty of the Japanese Language.—Dōmo! Nihon no kotoba wa, taihen ni iri-kunda mono de,— dōmo! koshi no magaru made manande mo, shosen oboe-tsŭkusemasŭmai.

^{35.} Shimbashi is the name of the quarter of Tōkyō in which the chief railway terminus is situated. Konda is a contraction of kondo wa.—36. This example is in the stiff style, bordering on the Written Language, which is usual on such occasions. Shampan wo tsuida koppu,

33. DIFFICULTY OF THE JAPANESE LANGUAGE.—Really, Japanese is a terribly complicated language. Even if one were to study till one's back became bent with age, one could not learn it thoroughly.

Oh! no; it is hardly as difficult a thing as that. It is a mere nothing if only you set yourself to it.

34. Asking the Way.—Please tell me the way.

About three hundred and sixty yards further on, there is a turning to the left. You must turn down it, and then turn again to the right, after which you go straight on.

Then it is parallel with this street, isn't it?

35. The Way to the British Legation.—Excuse my asking you; but would you kindly tell me the way to the British Legation?

Certainly. Look here! If you follow straight along this street branching off to the left in front of Shimbashi, you will come to a gate called Tora-no-mon on the right hand side at the very end. Go through it, and walk on and on, till you come to a gate called the Sakurada gate. Don't go through that, but turn to the left along the moat, and go straight on, and you will at once know which is the British Legation by seeing the flag ahead.

Very many thanks, Excuse me for having trespassed on your valuable time.

This example and the next are taken from the "Fude Shashin." Observe how in Japan it is the husband who orders his wife about, and not vice versā. The word nyōbō is non-honorific. For the na of dete mi-na, see p. 167, N. B.—Male speakers should avoid such strings of exclamations as Hai! oya! mā! and also the anata used as an interjection, and the yo! in the good lady's next Kono tōri, "this way," is often equivalent to our phrase "as you see." The words "I cannot accommodate you with one yet" have to be added in the English version, to complete the sense. Sono uchi, lit. "meanwhile," hence "soon."—40. Go fuzai is a highly cultivated expression. The common people prefer o rusu. The Ibumura-Rō (rō="upper storey") was a tea-house in Tōkyō, where meetings were held and sets of lectures delivered,

40. A MEETING DISPERSED.—When I looked in at your house the other day, you were absent, and your wife said that you had gone to listen to a set of lectures at the Ibumura Hall. Were the lectures at all interesting?

Oh! it was very rude of me to happen to be out just then. On that day it was unfortunate, you know. To begin with, I was rather late in starting; and then, when I got as far as the Hall, I found the people all pouring out in confusion. And on enquiring the reason of this, I was told that in the second lecture there had occurred some remarks which slightly infringed the government regulations, or something of that kind, and that the police had ordered the proceedings to be stopped. So when I arrived, the meeting had already broken up, which was a pity.

Oh! I am sorry for your disappointment.

it being the Japanese custom to "make a day of it," and to have one lecture delivered after another for hours at a time, sometimes on the same subject, but very often on different subjects. The Kinki-kwan has now replaced the Ibumura-r \bar{s} as a favourite place for such meetings. O ide no $y\bar{o}$ ni is an example of indirect quotation. Customer.—Please show me some toys.

Dealer.—All right, Sir! How would this kind of article suit you?

Customer.—Let me see! I will set aside from among these the ones that I want.

Dealer.—Sir! how would this suit you? It is called a travelling pillow. A lamp comes out of it, like this; also this purse for paper-money. It has two drawers. There are all sorts of other things inside it,—an abacus, a toothpick-holder, and a looking-glass. Here again is a luncheon-box in three parts, which all fit into one. This is a pen-stand, this is a tobacco-pouch. They are all quite solidly made.

Customer.—Well, I don't want that sort of thing. Most of the things I want are intended as presents to take home to the children. Here they are:—the toys which I have set aside here, besides three cups-and-balls, two of those sandal-wood-coloured trays over there, and these two photograph-frames. How much may the whole lot come to?

Dealer.—Oh! many thanks, Sir. The usual price would be two dollars sixty-five cents; but I will let you have them for two fifty.

Customer.—That is awfully dear. You mustn't put on such fancy prices as that. You must go down a great deal.

Dealer.—Really Sir, how could you expect me to? The things are not at all dear. What would be your idea as to the price, Sir?

Customer.—Well, let me see! I'll take them, if you will let me have them for one dollar fifty.

Dealer.—Oh! Sir, that is unreasonable. I don't put on such fancy prices as you seem to suppose. Please don't joke in this way, Sir, but give me a little more for the things.

Customer.—Well, then, I'll give you two dollars.

Dealer.—Only two dollars? That is cheap, Sir. However, as I hope for your custom, I will go down to that price. But do, please, Sir, give me the chance of recouping this alarming sacrifice by buying of me again.

[‡] Supply some such final verb as $negaimas\check{u}$. We have expanded the idea of this phrase in the English translation. $\check{U}me^{-nicaseru}$ is lit. "to fill in" (a hole with earth).

ANECDOTES.

TRUE ECONOMY.

The following incident happened about the period styled Kenchō (A.D. 1249—1256). When Aoto Saemon Fujitsuna, an official in the service of the Regent of Kamakura, was crossing the River Nameri one night, a retainer of his let ten cash fall by mistake into the river, whereupon Fujitsuna hastily hired some men, and made them light torches and pick all the money out of the water.

Some one is reported to have laughed at this, and to have said: "Through grudging the ten cash,

The whole sentence down to here forms a sort of accusative to the following clause relating Fujitsuna's action upon what had happened. "Thereupon" or "whereas" is the nearest approach to a literal English rendering .--5. The indefinite form yatoi is here equivalent to a gerund, because correlated with the gerund tsukete immediately below: conf. p. 178, ¶ 278, and p. 264.—6. Observe how the sentence is rounded off by kaeraremashita (honorific potential for kaerimashita; conf. ¶ 403, Further examples of such honorific potentials are offered below by kikaremashita, iwaremashita, and mosaremashita). Fujitsuna must have been put to great expense, what with buying torches and hiring men. This indeed is to be "Penny wise and pound foolish."

Fnjitsuna, hearing of this, said: "There may be some folks who think so. But the money spent is not wasted, because it remains in circulation, whereas the ten cash that sank to the bottom of the river would, if not picked up, have been treasure lost to the world. That is why I acted as I did."

Actions of this kind are examples of true economy.

Most people, mistaking one for the other, fall into parsimony while endeavouring to practise economy. But though there are such, Fujitsuna is not to be mentioned on the same day as they.

THANKFUL KICHIBEI.

Once upon a time there was an old man who had got nicknamed "Thankful Kichibei," and who led a happy existence, always thankful for everything, whatever it might be. When any one came to see him in summer and complained of the excessive heat, the old man would reply: "In the hot season we must be thankful for the heat. In the cold time of year we must be thankful for the cold."-If again any friend should sympathise with his poverty, and remark how inconvenient it must be in every way, he would say: "Oh! no! I am troubled neither with wife nor child, nor do I eat savoury food. Perhaps it is for this reason that I am long-lived, and I am thankful for it." Thus did he use the word "thankful" about everything.

One day, when, having gone to a friend's house, he was returning home again, he struck his head a tremendous blow against a post at the entrance. But even then, one who was near him heard him muttering his thanks, and exclaimed: "Mr. Kichibei, you say 'thank you' to everything. But what can there to be thankful for in hurting yourself by striking your head against post?"—"Why!" replied Kichibei, "the pain is exactly what I am thankful for. Don't you see that if, when I struck against the post just now, my skull had been fractured and I had died, I should have felt neither pain nor anything else, whereas I now feel the pain because, thanks to your kind influence, my life and my head are both safe? That is why I am truly thankful."

This ka or kan is probably the root of kare, "that."—8. Naze to into is an idiom meaning "for this reason," more lit. "if you ask why, (then it is as follows.)"—9. The words o kage sama, "thanks to your kind influence," are an empty compliment, indeed almost an expletive; conf. p. 294, No. 85.

IF THEY WAIT, THEIR AGES WILL COME RIGHT.

Once upon a time, in the mercantile quarter of the metropolis, there lived a glib-tongued old woman called Granny Nod, who gained her livelihood by negotiating marriages. Well, she once arranged a match between a man of five-and-thirty, whose age she concealed, and a girl of fifteen, and had gone so far as to make them exchange the gifts customary on betrothal. afterwards the girl's father, having heard how far advanced the bridegroom was in years, said to the old woman: "I have indeed no other complaint to make about him; but really I cannot think of giving my daughter to one whose age differs from hers by twenty years."—On the bridegroom's side, however, it was urged that he could not consent to forego her, as it was impossible, even vis-à-vis his relations, to mention such a difficulty after the ceremony of exchanging gifts had once been concluded. Thus the match-maker was placed in a terrible quandary, and at last she brought the matter before the judge.

The judge, having sent for both parties, asked the girl's father what was his reason for breaking off an engagement to which he had once agreed. The father replied: "You see, my lord, the matter stands thus. The match-maker told too outrageous a falsehood, there being a difference of no less than twenty years between a bridegroom of five-and-thirty and a bride of fifteen. That is why I said I could not consent. I would give him my daughter, if their ages differed at most by half."

Then the judge gave judgment as follows: "As that is how matters stand, I will decide in accordance with your desire. Do you give him your daughter five years hence. The bridegroom, on his side also, must faithfully wait till then. By that time he will be forty, and the girl twenty. It will be the time when their ages will differ exactly by half."—Thus was judgment given, and both parties left the judgment-hall with deep respect. Truly it was a witty decision.

For kame, see p. 26. The idea at the bottom of this story as to the magic power of the Chinese character ÞE, "tiger," is one commonly held by the lower classes.—2. Different nominatives must be supplied to the two verbs dashite and yomen; for it is one person who is supposed to show (lit. put forth) the character, and another who cannot read it when so shown.

AN ILLITERATE DOG.

You told me that when a dog barked at one, he would leave off doing so if one wrote the Chinese character for "tiger" on the palm of one's hand, and kept one's fist clenched. Well! I have had a rough time of it for having listened to you.

Indeed! How so?

A European dog began barking and flying at me as I was coming home late last night. So I stuck my clenched fist out towards him, and just look how I got bitten!

Oh! Then probably it was a dog who had not yet learnt Japanese writing.

Dogs are doubtless not the only creatures incapable of reading Japanese writing when shown it.

A DREAM OF LIQUOR.

Japanese sake tastes best hot, and is generally taken so, it being heated by placing the bottle in hot water.—7. Midday is signalised, in modern Tōkyō, by the firing of a gun, which gives the time to the townspeople.

Notes to ¶ 455.—I. Lit. "to pursue fashion."—2. We have rendered Eri-zen by "a haberdasher's." The name is, however, really a proper noun, compounded of eri for han-eri (see vocabulary), and zen for Zembei or some such "personal name," of the owner of the shop.—3. Observe how the young man, true to the habits of the student class at the present day, interlards his ordinary conversation with such high-sounding Chinese terms as kyū-y-ō, "urgent business;" ki-taku, "returning home; " kin-jitsu, lit. "near days," i.e., "in a few days."—4. Kitaku suru tokoro desŭ = "I am just on my way home;"

There will be nothing lost by waiting till I warm it." So he was just going to set it to warm, when the midday gun' wakened him with a start, whereupon he ruefully exclaimed: "Oh! what a pity it was that I did not make haste to drink it cold!"

THE PURSUIT OF FASHION.

Two young men having come across each other in front of a haberdasher's shop in Fŭkiya Street, one of them waved his hand hurriedly, and cried out: "I have a lot to say to you; but as urgent business calls me home at present, I must put off the conversation for a few days, when I will come and see you at your house." The other, astonished at his friend's strange excitement, asked him what this urgent business might be,-whether he meant to say, for instance, that any of his family had been taken ill, "Oh! no," replied the first young man with a laugh; "I have just been getting at this shop a kind of kerchief which my wife commissioned me to buy for her. The reason why I said I couldn't stop and talk to you now, is that it would be an awful thing for her to fall behind the fashion while I was loitering on the way."

Notes to ¶ 456.—1. This story and the next may serve as specimens of the jeux-de-mots in which the Japanese sometimes indulge. Here the play is on the word habakari, and on the phrase ne mo ha mo nai, "insignificant," but more lit. "without either root or leaf," as fully explained in the portions of the English translation between square hrackets.—2. More lit. "having radishes grown," "tsŭkuraseru heing the causative of tsŭkuru," "to make," hence "to grow" (trans.).—3. Lit. "do not forthcome according to (his) way of thinking."—4. Supply omotte.—5. For tokoro je, here rendered by "in this situation," see p. 42.—6. O...de, lit. "not deigning honourably to cause to do."—7. This clause is lit. "as for (the fact) that (you) deign (to do so) by (your) august self."—8. We have very freely rendered eshaku wo suru by the word "politely." It properly signifies

RADISHES.

An ignorant farmer had been growing radishes2 for two or three years with indifferent success. So, attributing the failure to his men having scamped their work, he went out into the field himself and began digging. In this situation he was seen by a labourer who happened to pass "Oh Sir! Oh Sir!" cried the labourer politely, "it is dreadful to find you working like this yourself, instead of letting your men work for you." [Or, "If you work like this yourself, instead of letting your men work for you, you will get leaves only," ha bakari meaning "leaves only," while habakari is a polite phrase here rendered by "it is dreadful."] The farmer, angered by this remark, exclaimed: "You are an insolent fellow for daring to tell me that, when I grow radishes, I shall get nothing but leaves." Just at that moment another labourer happened to come up, and said: "No doubt, Sir, you are quite right to be angry. Still he did not mean what he said, and so it is not worth taking any notice of it." [Or, "It is a thing having neither roots nor leaves." This second outsider's and would-be peacemaker's remark, thus interpreted, is more sweeping even than the first man's; for it denies the production, not only of radish roots (ne), but even of the leaves (ha).

The thoughtless have to suffer perpetual humiliations.

[&]quot;to apologise," "to make excuses."—9. To wa = to iu no wa, "the fact of your saying that."—10. After to, supply itte, "having said."—11. The sentence, down to here, is lit. "Neverthless, as for him, it being the fact that he spoke without any discrimination."—12. Lit. "As for people without consideration of after and before, they are people who get shame on the top of shame."

Notes to ¶ 457.—1. To appreciate the point of this story, one should know the game of go ("checkers" or "go-bang," the latter word being a corruption of the Japanese goban, "a checker-board"). In one variety of this game the chief object is, by establishing "eyes," i.e., spaces surrounded by not less than four of one's own counters, to stop the spread of the opponent's counters over the board. Remember, too, that me means both "eye" and "open space." At the end of the story a ludicrous effect is produced by the alternative idea suggested of an open space, or of an eye, on the top of the priest's head, the suggestion being equally funny

AN EYE ON THE TOP OF THE HEAD.

Once upon a time, the priest of a Buddhist temple invited a friend who was fond of playing checkers, and the two sat down to a game. But, as the proverb says, "fondness gives skill." So it came about that the friend blocked every single corner of the board, to the priest's great mortification. "If only," said the latter, "I could but get one side free!" And with these words, he made constant efforts to open up some spaces [in Japanese, "eyes"]. Just then some flies collected on the top of his head, causing him annoyance. So he scratched his head with the hand that held one of the pieces, saying: "If I could get an open space [in Japanese, "an eye"] here, probably the corner would be freed."

Another eye on the top of his head would have turned him into [the sort of hobgoblin known as] a "three-eyed friar."

whichever way you take it.—2. Lit. "one surface," i.e., "one game" (on the flat surface of the board).—3. Lit. "(a) fond (person) indeed is skilful of (the) thing (he likes)." This proverb is in the Written Language, where the emphatic particle koso causes the verb following it to take the termination e. This peculiarity has died out of the Colloquial.—4. Ikasō is the probable future of ikasu, the transitive corresponding to the intransitive ikiru, "to live." Thus it means "shall perhaps make alive," hence "in order to free."—5. Or mitsu-me kozō," the "three-eyed acolyte," one of the supernatural terrors of Japanese youth.

This piece consists of the first two chapters of the Botan-Dōrō (see p. 10), slightly edited in order to make them more genuinely colloquial, and to remove a few expressions which English standards of propriety condemn.—The title of the novel alludes to an incident in a later portion of the story, which it would take too long to relate here.

THE PEONY LANTERN.

CHAPTER I.

On the 4th May, 1743, in the days when Tōkyō was still called Yedo, the festival of Prince Shōtoku was celebrated at the Shintō temple of Tenjin in Yushima, and the worshippers assembled in great crowds on the occasion.

Now in Third Street, Hongō, there was a sword-shop known as Fujimura-ya Shimbei, the fine articles exposed for sale in which were seen by a samurai who happened to pass by. He appeared to be about one or two-and-twenty years of age, had a fair complexion, a vivacious expression in his eyes, and a cue tightly bound up,—indicative of slight quickness of temper. He wore a splendid coat, a beautiful pair of trowsers, and sandals soled with leather. Behind him, as he strode along in front, there followed a servant in a blue coat and striped sash, with a wooden sword having brass fastenings. The samurai looked in at the shop, sat down, and, glancing round at all the swords that lay there, said:

^{3.} Tenjin is the posthumous name, under which the famous and unfortunate court noble, Sugawara Michizane (died A.D. 903), is worshipped as the god or patron saint of letters.

^{4.} Shōtoku Taishi, the great imperial patron of Buddhism in Japan, lived from A.D. 572 - 621.

^{5.} Strictly speaking, Fujimura-ya is the name of the shop, and Shimbei the personal ("Christian") name of the shopkeeper. But Japanese idiom does not clearly distinguish between a shop and its owner. Conf. ¶ 55, p. 40.

^{6.} Bizen is the name of a province in Central Japan, famous for its swords.—

"Mine host! That sword over there with the iron guard to the dark-coloured hilt,—I don't know whether the braid is black or dark blue,—looks like a good one. Just let me have a look at it."

"All right, Sir," said the shopkeeper. (Then aside to the shop-boy:) "Here! you offer the gentleman some tea!" (Then again to the samurai:) "To-day, owing to the crowds gone out to see the festival, the roads are sure to have been dusty, which must have been a great nuisance to Your Honour." Then, dusting the sword, he said: "Here! pray look at it, Sir!" With these words, he handed it to the samurai, who, taking it up and inspecting it, said:

"It's an awfully good one. So far as I can judge, I should incline to consider it a Bizen."

"Ah!" replied the shopkeeper, "Your Honour is a real connoisseur. I am overpowered with admiration. It is just as you say. The other dealers in the trade make no doubt of its being the handiwork of Sükesada in the sixteenth century. But unfortunately it bears no maker's name, which is a great pity."

"Mine host! What is the price of it, eh?"

"You are very kind, Sir. I ask no fancy prices; and, as I have just had the honour to tell you, the sword would be an extremely valuable one, if only it had the maker's name engraved on it. But as it is anonymous, the price is ten dollars."

^{7.} Sŭkesada was a famous swordsmith of the Tenshō period, A.D. 1573 - 1592.

"What? you say ten dollars? That's rather too dear. But I suppose you'll go down to seven and a half,—won't you?"

"Oh! really," said the shopkeeper; "why! I should lose at that rate. Indeed, indeed I should."

So, while the samurai and the sword-dealer went on bargaining about the price of the sword, a drunkard, who happened to pass by at the back, caught hold of the samurai's servant, and, calling out "Hey! what are you up to?" staggered, and came down plump in a sitting posture. Then, managing to get up again, he glared at the fellow sideways, abruptly shook his fist at him, and began to poinmel him. The servant, laying the fault on the liquor, took the beating patiently, and, without offering any resistance, put his hands on the ground, and apologised over and over again with downcast head. But the drunkard would not so much as give ear to his apologies, and only thrashed him the more. The samurai suddenly happened to look round; and, as the fellow being thrashed was his own retainer Tosuke, he was taken aback, and made excuses to the drunkard, saving:

"I know not of what rude act that man of mine may have been guilty towards Your Honour; but I myself beg to apologise to you for him. Pray be so kind as to pardon him."

"What?" said the drunkard, "you say that this creature is your servant, this outrageously rude fellow? If he goes out as a gentleman's retainer, it would be but proper for him to keep himself in the background near his master. But no! what does he do? He sprawls out into the road

"He is a thoughtless fellow," replied the samurai, "whom I earnestly entreat Your Honour to pardon. I beg to apologise for him to you myself."

"Just now," continued the drunkard, "as something came bang up against me when I staggered, I thought that perhaps there was a dog there. But no! it was this ruffian, and he made my knee hit the ground. Here, just look! he has made my clothes all muddy like this. I gave him a thrashing, because he was an insolent fellow. What do you think of that? I'm going to do what I want with him; so be good enough to hand him over to me."

"You see, Sir," replied the samurai, "that he is too stupid to know what he is doing. He is no better than a dog. So do pray be kind enough to pardon him."

"Well! that's good!" retorted the drunkard. "I never heard of that sort of thing before. Is it etiquette for a samurai to go out walking with a dog for a retainer? If he is no better than a dog, I'll take charge of him and poison him with strychnine. You may apologise as you like, I won't take your apologies. Gracious goodness! If a master wanted to apologise for his servant's insolence, the natural thing for him to do would be to put both hands on the ground, and to express his regret over and over again, apologising and striking the earth with his head. But what do you do? While you are apologising, you are busy with one hand loosening your sword for use,—pretty manners indeed for a samurai! What do you mean? Is it your intention to kill me, you low knave?"

- "By no means," replied the samurai. "It is only that I had thought of purchasing this sword of the dealer here, and was just inspecting the metal-work, when all of a sudden I got in for this row, and....."
- "Oh!" laughed the drunkard, "whether you buy the sword or don't buy the sword, that's your affair;"—whereupon, as the samurai continued to endeavour to appease his drunken frenzy, the passers-by put in their word, saying:
 - "Look out! there's a quarrel! take care!"
 - "What? you say there's a quarrel?"
 - "Yes; the parties to it are samurai."
 - "That's a bad look out."

Then, as another asked what it was, somebody replied:

"Well, you see, it appears it's a misunderstanding about the purchase of a sword. That drunken samurai there first priced the sword, and was just refusing to buy it on account of its being too dear, when the younger samurai here came up and also priced it. This angered the drunkard, who found fault with him for pricing, without reference to him, an article which he himself had been intending to buy. That's more or less what the misunderstanding sprang from."

But another broke in, saying, "Oh dear no! that's not it at all. The misunderstanding is about a dog. One of the two said to the other: 'As you killed my dog with strychnine, you must give me yours in return, and let me poison it with strychnine too. Gompachi's case, too, it was a quarrel about a dog which grew into all that trouble."

"Oh dear no!" said another onlooker at the side of him who had just been speaking, "that's not it in the least. It seems that the two samurai are relations,—one the uncle, the other his nephew. It is the drunkard with the scarlet face that is the uncle, and the handsome young fellow that is the nephew. The quarrel between them arose from the nephew's refusing to give his uncle some pocket-money."

But another man, standing by, said "Oh! no, he is a pickpocket."

And then, among the various comments which were made by the passers-by, one man delivered himself of the information that the drunkard was a swashbuckler of a samurai called Kurokawa Kōzō, who was living in the middle mansion of Hommyöji at Maruyama, and who had originally been a retainer of my lord Koide, but who, being ill-behaved, had sunk into debauchery, used often to frighten folks by drawing his sword at random, and used to roam through the streets in a violent and disorderly manner, sometimes forcing his way into eating-houses, and then, when he had had his fill of victuals and drink, telling the eating-housekeeper to come for payment to the middle mansion of Hommyöji, thus ruining people by his violence and riotous living, so that the present row would doubtless end in the younger samurai getting bullied into treating him to liquor.

"Oh! is that it?" said a voice. "Any average man would cut the ruffian down. But I suppose the young samurai won't be able to do so,—will he?—for he looks weakly."

And the buzz of these whispered insinuations found its way to the young samurai's ears, and he flared up, and, evidently flying into a passion, his face became scarlet, and the blue veins stood out on his forehead, and he drew close to the drunken wretch, and said:

"Will you not excuse my retainer, even after all the apologies I have offered?"

"You wordy idiot!" laughed the other. "To look at you, you are a mighty fine gentleman, of whom one might suppose that he either was one of the Shōgun's great vassals, or else belonged to one of the clans. But you are a shabby, disreputable vagrant. Nothing could be ruder than your conduct. I am less than ever disposed to excuse you;—and now what will you do?" and with these words he spat in the young samurai's face.

This was too much for the patience even of one so long-suffering as the younger man. "Impudent wretch that you are!" cried he, "to presume thus upon my forbearance, to continue getting more and more abusive and violent, and actually to spit in a gentleman's face! As you won't accept apologies, here's what I'll do to you!" And with these words, and almost before he could be seen to have placed his hand on the hilt of the sword which he had just been inspecting in the shop, he out with it and flashed it in the drunkard's face. Thereupon the bystanders took fright. "Oh! he has drawn his sword!" cried they, as they saw it flash in the hands of him, who, taking him for a weakling, they had imagined would not draw. And then, like leaves scattered by the wind, off they fled helter-skelter in every direction; and the ward-doors were made fast, and the barriers of every lane were closed, and the shop-keepers all shut up their shops, so that the whole street was deserted, the old sword-dealer alone continuing to sit listlessly in his shop-front, simply because he was too much dazed to run away.

Well, drunk as Kurokawa Kōzō was, he,—on the principle that 'a tipsy man follows his natural bent,'—scared at the rage that was painted on the young samurai's face, tried to escape, and had gone some twenty paces with a staggering gait, when his antagonist pursued him with his sandals on and cried out, "Wretch! your conduct does not bear out your insolent words. You are a coward, you are, for showing your back to a gentleman whom you are disputing with. Come back! "

Then Kōzō seeing it was no longer any good, steadied himself on his staggering legs, put his hand on the hilt of his sword, and was turning to face the young samurai, when the latter, with the single exclamation "Ha!" slashed deep into his shoulder, cutting him down, so that the man fell on to one knee with a cry, when his opponent, springing on him again, cut at his chest in such wise that he fell sliced obliquely into three pieces. The young samurai then dexterously gave him the coupde-grâce, and returned to the sword-shop, shaking the blood from off his blade. As he had from the beginning intended to cut the swashbuckler down, he was not flurried in the slightest, but turned to his servant, and said:

"Nay," said the samurai, to comfort him, "you need not fret like that. A disorderly fellow who goes about disturbing all the town! there is no harm in cutting down a creature of that sort. Don't fret about it."—And with these words, he called out nonchalantly to the terror-stricken shop-keeper: "Ha! ha! mine host! I never thought this sword of yours would cut as well as that. But it does cut. It cuts first-rate."

To which the shop-keeper, trembling the while, made answer: "Nay! it was because Your Honour's arm is skilful."

"Not at all," replied the samurai. "The blade is really a good one. And how now? I hope you'll go down to seven dollars and a half."

So the sword-dealer, anxious not to get implicated in the affair, said that it was all right.

"And mind," continued the samurai, "that in no case will I allow your establishment to be put to any inconvenience on account of what has happened. Of course I must report the matter at once to the warden of the ward. Just let me use your writing-box a minute to write a card."

But the shop-keeper, never noticing that the writing-box was close beside him, called out in a tremulous voice: "Boy! bring the writing-box!"—a command to which nothing but silence responded; for all the people in the house had fled none knew whither when the row began, and there was no one present.

So the samurai exclaimed: "Mine host! I really admire your courage,—the courage proper in the owner of a sword-shop,—sitting here in your shop without moving an inch, notwithstanding this affray."

"Nay! Sir," gasped the tradesman. "Your praise covers me with confusion. I have been unable to stir through fright ever since the beginning of it, and....."

"Why!" said the samurai, "isn't the writing-box there at your side?"

These words at last brought the shopman to his senses, and he pushed the writing-box towards the samurai, who, lifting off the lid, took up a pen and quietly wrote his name, "Iijima Heitarō," then reported the matter to the warden of the ward, and went home to his lord's mansion at Ushigome.

On his relating the whole affair to his father, Iijima Heizaemon, the latter praised him for his manly deed; nor was the young man specially blamed when the report was sent in to their superior, Kobayashi Gondayū. It all simply ended by being so much the better for the slayer, and so much the worse for the slain.

CHAPTER II.

Now Iijima Heitarō, having, at the age of two-andtwenty, cut down a ruffian, and being an energetic young samurai who knew not what fear was, grew wiser and wiser as he advanced in years. Later on, having lost his father, he inherited the patrimony and changed his name to Heizaemon, and then married a wife from the family of a hatamoto called Miyake residing at Suidō-bata. After a. little while, there was born to them a daughter, whom they named O Tsuyu, and who was so beautiful that her parents doted on her as if they had held a jewel in their hand. As they had no other children after her, their only pet, their care for her increased all the more; and meanwhile, there being, as the proverb says, "no barrierkeeper to keep time back," the young girl was now in her sixteenth year, and the family was more prosperous than ever, when, as an exemplification of the saying that "in this world what waxeth waneth," some ailment, quite slight at first, attacked the mother and ended by carrying her off.

Afterwards Iijima, finding that the household would not work smoothly without a mistress, took to himself a second wife named O Kuni. But somehow or other, the daughter and O Kuni did not get on well together. This was a trouble to the master of the house, who thereupon built a villa in the neighbourhood of Yanagi-shima, and sent his daughter to reside there separately, attended by a maid called O Yone. And this it was which was the beginning of the downfall of the house of Iijima.

Well, that year too passed by, and in the following one O Tsuyu entered her seventeenth year.

Now there was a man named Yamamoto Shijō, who had long been the family physician of the Iijimas. In reality he was a chatterbox and a quack,—one of those doctors of whom it is said that they write no prescriptions out of regard for the welfare of their patients,—a man who carried about in his pocket-book such things as the wherewithal for conjuring tricks, or else paper-masks for acting the mimic, instead of the pills or powders of which any ordinary physician has a little store by him.

Well, this doctor had a friend, an unattached samuran called Hagiwara Shinzaburō, who lived on the income derived from fields and house property which he owned at Shimizu-dani in Nezu. He was naturally a handsome man, still unmarried though already twenty-one years of age, and so shy that he would not go out, but occupied himself with nothing but reading.

Shijō came to call upon him one day, and said: "As it is such fine weather to-day, let us go and see the plum-blossoms at Kameido, and, on our way back, look in at the villa of a friend of mine, Iijima Heizaemon.— What? you say no? You are altogether so shy, that you take no interest in ladies' society, whereas there is nothing so delightful for a man as that society. In the villa which I have just mentioned there are none but ladies, and oh! dear me! there are only two of them,—a perfectly lovely young girl and a good-natured maid-servant, so that we can have some fun. The young lady is really a treat just simply to look at. Doubtless the plum-blossoms are beautiful too; but then they don't move, they can't speak, whereas women possess both motion and speech. Anyhow, please come along!"

So saying, he led him off, and they went together to see the plum-blossoms, and then, on the way home, looked in at Iijima's villa.

- "Excuse me!" called out Shijō. "Here I am, after all this long time."
- "Who is it?" answered O Yone. "Oh, really! pray come in!"
- "Ah! O Yone!" cried Shijō. "It is really an unconscionable time since my last visit. I hope the young lady is quite well.—Well, well! this is splendid.—But you do live so far off since you moved here from Ushigome, that I have become quite remiss in calling, which is really too bad of me."

and with these words, he was just bringing out his wine-gourd, when O Yone came in with tea and cakes, saying:

"It is poor tea, but pray take a cup of it."

"Please don't take any more trouble about us," replied Shijō. "By the way," continued he, "we have come here to-day in hopes of seeing your young mistress. She'll be coming now; so look at her."

While he was thus speaking, Iijima's daughter, Miss O Tsuyu, in the small four and a half mat room opposite, curious to see the rare visitors, had opened one of the sliding paper doors a little and peeped out; and, as she did so, her glance fell on Hagiwara Shinzaburō seated at Shijō's side,—so manly, so distinguished-looking, handsome to the pitch of making one think what a beautiful woman he would have made. And she started, and wondered what stroke of fortune had brought hither so handsome a fellow. Then, the blood rushing to her cheeks, she became scarlet, and, overcome by a feeling of awkwardness, shut the paper slide with a click, and retired within it. But, as she could not see his face when shut up in the room, she again gently slid the door open, and, while pretending

Then again, apparently overcome with bashfulness, she withdrew within the sliding door, but had hardly done so when once more her face popped out. And so she went on fidgeting,—out and in, in and out, which Shijō perceiving said:

"Mr. Hagiwara! I say! the young lady has been staring at you all the time. She may pretend to be looking at the plum-blossoms; but for all that, her eyes are turned completely in this direction,—indeed they are. To-day I have been quite thrown into the shade by you, eh?"

While he was thus chattering away, the maid O Yone came into the room and said:

"My young mistress bids me say that, though she has nothing worthy your acceptance, she begs you to take a glass of wine accompanied by a snack of our poor rustic fare. She hopes you will take your own time over it, and give her the benefit of your amusing conversation, as on previous occasions."

"Really," replied Shijō, "I am confounded by so much civility. Dear me! dear me! Here is soup! Delicious! Thank you! Cold liquor we already had with us; but this hot wine of yours is quite a special treat. Many thanks! Please ask your young mistress if she too won't favour us with her company. It was not for the plum-blossoms that we came to-day. In reality it was the young lady whom....Why! what is the matter?"

^{15.} Sake-drinking is a notable feature of a Japanese wedding.

O Yone (laughing): "I told her so just now; but she said she felt it awkward, because she doesn't know the gentleman whom you have brought with you. But when I thereupon said 'Then refuse to see him,' she said 'But I do want to see him all the same."

Shijō: "Nay! nay! there is no reason for her to feel shy. This gentleman is a most intimate friend of mine. It would hardly be too much to say that we played about as children together; and we have come with the most earnest desire to see her just for a minute or two."

After this speech of Shijō's, O Yone led in her young mistress, who was, however, evidently so bashful that, after whispering a welcome to Shijō from the place where she sat behind O Yone, she said no more, but constantly stuck close behind O Yone, edging hither when O Yone came hither, and edging thither when O Yone went thither.

"Well! well! Miss O Tsuyu!" cried Shijō, "I know that I have been an unconscionable time in coming to see you. It is delightful to find you in the same excellent health as ever. This gentleman is my friend, Hagiwara Shinzaburō. He is a bachelor. Happening to bring him with me to-day, we have been hospitably feasted, and are overcome with gratitude. Let me offer you the wine-cup, just to drink to the making of a new acquaintance.—Ha! ha! what is this? At this rate, it looks as if we were celebrating a wedding!"

And as he thus went on ceaselessly keeping the ball rolling, the young lady, though bashful, was glad too, and, while pretending not to look at Hagiwara Shinzaburō, was casting furtive side-glances at him; and, as an illustration of the saying that "when the intention is there, the eyes can say as much as the mouth,' Shinzaburō too, captivated by the girl's beauty, felt as if he were in a dream.

Well, what with one thing and another, the evening was drawing in. So Shinzaburō said:

"Many thanks for your kind hospitality on this my first visit. I think I must now be taking my leave."

"Oh!" cried O Yone, who had guessed her young mistress's tender passion, and who therefore did her best to detain the young man, "it is still early. Please don't be in such a hurry."

Shinzaburō, too, in his heart of hearts, was in love, but as he was still ignorant of the world, he was embarrassed and said:

"Many thanks. But when it gets dark, my people will become anxious about me; so I will call again another day instead."

With these parting words, he made to go. So Shijō said:

"Well then, we will take our leave. Many thanks for all your kind hospitality to us to-day. We will certainly come in a few days to call and thank you.—Come along, Mr. Hagiwara! let us go!"

And with these words, knowing, as he did, his way about the house, he went in the direction of the entrance, joking with O Yone all the while.

- "Mr. Shijō," said O Yone, "your head has become perfectly shining."
- "Nonsense!" retorted Shijō, "you only think i shines, because you are looking at it under the light,—ha! ha!"

Thus did these two display their tact as they walked on towards the entrance, talking and joking about all sorts of subjects, and leaving the young lady of the house and Shinzaburō behind. Shinzaburō, to whom the young lady showed the way, was only too glad to find that no one was by to see. So, overcoming his shyness, he whispered some vow into O Tsuyu's ear, thereby making her look bashful and answer:

"Oh! then, do please come again! If you don't come, I shall die,—indeed I shall." In this decided manner did she speak, with infinite love in her words.

"Goodbye!" cried O Yone. "Pray excuse the poorness of our entertainment to-day. Goodbye!"—and thereupon Shijō and Shinzaburō went off together.

From that day forward the young girl's words remained in Shinzaburo's ears, and he never forgot them even for a moment. It has been retained in this edition, though its point of view is somewhat antiquated, because of its representatively idiomatic style. Speak thus, and you will be intelligible to any audience, however uncultivated.

WHY?

What is termed why in English and naze in our langnage, is a very important thing. Nevertheless, Chinese and Japanese of olden times hardly ever used the word. When told perhaps that such and such was the doctrine of Confucius or the opinion advocated by Mencius, they habitually acquiesced without further enquiry into the rights of the question. Now, therefore, when the theory has arisen that doubt is one of the greatest sources of enlightenment and progress, and when, consequently, Europeans are apt to assert the importance of doubt and its services to the cause of civilisation, and to prove this their assertion by pointing to the Chinese and Japanese as instances of nations forever unprogressive, owing to their neglect to subject all things to the scrutiny of donbt,-when we hear such opinions ventilated, and find ourselves quoted in such a connection, we all must agree that it is by no means a pleasant state of affairs.

It is exactly this thing called doubt that causes the word why to become an indispensable one. Take a child, for instance. Probably its grandmother or somebody says to it: "Mind you mustn't tell stories!" Then let the following doubt be expressed in reply: "Why is it wrong to tell stories?" and it will generally happen that the enquirer will be snubbed with a "'Why?" indeed! None of your pert retorts for me! Every one agrees that it is wrong for people to tell stories."

^{2.} The word naze is little used even now, except in anger. The circumlocution dō iu wake de? "for what reason?" is generally preferred.

Yes, indeed! no doubt every one agrees that it is wrong to tell stories; and to acquiesce in this principle with a knowledge of the reasons why story-telling is wrong, or to acquiesce in it unintelligently, is equally to acquiesce. But surely there is a great difference between the two modes of acquiescence. Why is it that there is what is termed a government in the country? Why do the people have to pay taxes? It is only by raising such questions and searching for reasons, that liberal political opinions get started. When people simply go on unreasoningly, accepting as ultimate facts the existence of government and the obligation to pay the taxes, they merely sink deeper and deeper into servility, and never make any progress.

Doubt is indispensable, not in morals and in politics only. It is indispensable in other things also, in every single thing in the world, down to the very smallest. People often say and repeat that learning is important. But after all, in no branch of learning is there any fruitful course to be pursued, unless we make doubt the foundation, and, with a perpetual why, search for reasons into every nook and corner of the subject. So long as folks simply acquiesce, without reasoning, in the infallibility of every word that stands written in the Chinese Classics, the world will remain a Chinese Classic world, without a chance of progressing, however many centuries may roll by. Of course, too, it may be quite possible for those to exist thus, whose spirit is satisfied with such a state of things. But when people have once come to a clear understanding of how, if they use the word why and search for reasons, they will go on from reason to reason, so that the reasons will first bear blossoms and then fruit, and that more numerous and more intense kinds of happiness will be attained to, will not why then become a thing which they will like to try their hand at using?

When human beings reach the ne plus ultra of servility, somewhat unexpected manners and customs are the result. Somewhat strange, too, are the results of the ne plus ultra of ignorance,—in other words, of a lack of knowledge of the reasons of things. Penetrate into savage societies at this very day, in this nineteenth century of ours, and you will find among them races that show an utter disregard both for departed ancestors and for unborn descendants,—races that live for their own generation only. Nay! what need to talk of departed ancestors and of unborn descendants? Why!

there are among the number, when you get to the very lowest of them, races of men who pay not the slightest heed to the ties of kindred, who show no trace of family affection or of anything of that sort, but who are quite contented if, by hook or by crook, they can, each on his own account, scrape together a livelihood.

Gentlemen! just look at the way dogs live. What is it like, let me ask? Is it not true that the fondness between the parent and her young endures but for a brief season, while the puppies are sucking? Wean them, and at once they become strangers—excuse me, strange-curs—to one another. This being so, I take it that such creatures as the savage races just referred to belong to the category described as "not far removed from the birds and beasts." To begin by parental, filial, and fraternal love, gradually to extend such kindly feelings to neighbours, then to all the people of a district, and next to those of a province is the origin of patriotism. But there can never be any such thing as patriotism in the absence of even the love between living parents and children.

However, we Japanese are fortunately not so ignorant as all that, and accordingly we have a fair share of the patriotic spirit. But having this patriotic spirit, the why of which I have spoken becomes all the more indispensable. Even should we, acquiescing unreasoningly in the dicta of the Chinese Classics, think to live on in a Chinese Classic world, the satisfaction with such a state of things would be for ourselves alone. None of the nations of Europe and America will be satisfied with it. They will go on using the word why, they will go on inventing new sources of happiness. This granted, there will be no help for it but that Japan must perish naturally, without the necessity for assuming any special intention on the part of foreign nations to destroy her, but by the mere working of the law of the survival of the fittest. If Japan were the only country in the world, then, gentlemen, you might continue forever to please yourselves by living on in a Chinese Classic world. But this plan will not do when there are so many other countries besides ours. Troublesome though it be, we are bound to use the word why, and to search to the root of everything.

half-joking use of the honorifics is by no means uncommon, and is used to give many a sly tap under cover of an apparently polite style of address.

A TALK ABOUT INVESTIGATION.

(EXTRACTED FROM A LECTURE DELIVERED BEFORE THE IMPERIAL UNIVERSITY POPULAR LECTURE SOCIETY BY MR. NAKAZAWA IWATA.)

At Heidelberg, a town in Germany, there is a university, where lives an old professor now eighty-six or seven years of age. He is a hale old man, and his name is Bunsen. He and I are colleagues, in the sense that we are both specialists in the same field. But the difference of our respective ages and of our talents makes of me his very humble follower.—Well, this old gentleman, in his younger days, had engaged himself to a beautiful girl. It had been settled that the wedding should take place at the church at about eleven o'clock in the morning of a certain day in a certain month. So the bride, anxions not to be late, reached the church about ten in brilliant array, to find, however, that Bunsen had not yet arrived. Eleven o'clock came, twelve o'clock came, three o'clock, four o'clock,—still no sign of the Professor. A

The lecturer and Dr. Bunsen are both chemists.—5. $Ch\bar{o}$ - $y\bar{o}$ ="old young;" hence "age," Ta- $sh\bar{o}$ ="much little," hence "amount;" conf. ¶ 48, p. 34, for the "synthesis of contradictories," which these terms exemplify.—6. This word is used half-jokingly. Indeed there is a touch of raillery in all this passage, especially in the bride's words "Osoku naru to ikenai."—7. Apropos of these lectures, we take the opportunity to remind students of the fundamental difference between English and Japanese in the matter of the length and complication of sentences, brought about by that system of syntactical "integration," which we have explained in ¶ 442—4, p. 280 et seq. No foreigner will messenger was sent to the house to make enquiries. Where was he? Nowhere to be seen! Thereupon, home went the bride in a fury.

The fact was that the Professor had instituted some small experiment in his laboratory on the morning of the day in question, and had become so deeply interested in it as to fail to notice the flight of the hours. By and by, on looking at his watch and finding that it was six o'clock in the afternoon, he recollected the situation with dismay, and hurried off to the church to see what could be done. But the bride had already departed in her wrath. Thereupon, the Professor came to the conclusion that marriage was a bother. So he remained unmarried from that day forward, and he still lives on as a hale old man, but wifeless.

This example may suffice to show you the attraction which scientific investigation is capable of exercising.

Dr. Katō, in granting the present writer permission to make use of the composition in question, suggested that it would be best to take the text of the pamphlet, as having been touched up, and hence showing a better style. After some consideration, this advice has been disregarded, it seeming more interesting, and also probably more profitable from the point of view of a student of the Colloquial, to print the words exactly as taken down by the short-hand reporter from the accomplished

A POINT OF MORAL CULTURE.

(EXTRACTED FROM A LECTURE DELIVERED BEFORE THE EDUCATIONAL SOCIETY OF JAPAN BY DR. KATŌ HIROYUKI.)

The proverb tells us that "for every thousand with eyes, there are a thousand without." That is to say that, out of a total of two thousand persons, there are a thousand who can see and a thousand who cannot. In my opinion, however, the proportion of those who can, to those who cannot, see is by no means equal. Out of every two thousand persons, no less than one thousand nine hundred and ninety-seven or eight are blind, leaving but two or three with sight, while even those two or three cannot see properly. Thus enormous, in this world of ours, is the proportion of blind folks. I do not mean to say that they are blind physically. They are blind

The an of ichi-an is lit. "an opinion," hence "a case," here rendered "a point."—2. Observe the potential used honorifically.—3. For this proverb, see p. 312, No. 21. Observe, here and elsewhere, how we anglicise the style by turning the phrase personally ("the proverb tells us," etc.), and conf. ¶ 440, p. 279. If all the sentences were left impersonal as in the Japanese original, the translation would never read like genuine English.—4. scientifically and philosophically. One thousand nine hundred and ninety-seven or eight of them are blind, if regarded from the standpoint of the truly educated. Since, then, this world is one in which the blind so greatly predominate, we need something wherewith to guide them. more indispensable than the machinery wherewith to guide the two or three who can see, is that required for the guidance of the one thousand nine hundred and ninety-seven or eight who cannot. Thus does it come about that a consideration of the subject from our present point of view makes me quite a friend to religion, as the thing needed for the guidance of the one thousand nine hundred and ninety-seven or eight who cannot see. The German philosopher Schopenhauer has said: "Religion is like a firefly. It can shine only in dark places." Now, if I am right in thinking, as I said just now, that out of every two thousand persons in the world, no fewer than one thousand nine hundred and ninety-seven or eight cannot see, ours is indeed a world of total darkness. And if it is so dark a world, the light of the fireflies must not be dispensed with.

Auguste Comte has said that the stages of the world's development are first from the theological order of ideas to the metaphysical, and thence on to that of the positive philosophy. But in my opinion it is an infinitely difficult matter for the world to pass out of the theological stage. I think that the mass of mankind are in this theological stage. And to one who thinks thus, religion, though unacceptable,—indeed unworthy of mention,—from the scientific or philosophical standpoint, because dealing with gratuitous fancies,—religion, I say, is indispensable for the sake of the one thousand nine hundred and ninety-seven or eight who cannot see. For this reason moral culture in general, inculcate it as you will, is of no avail in our day unless associated with religion. No system of training will produce practical results in this universally stupid world of ours, unless it possess, and use as its lever, some object of worship either beneficent or redoubtable, be it a deified hero, a Buddha, or a supreme God. Science and philosophy are sublime things. But they are needed only by the learned world, beyond the limits of which they are powerless. I grow daily more fully convinced that, beyond those limits, among mankind at large, no moral training that does not start from religion is likely to have the least effect.

Supposing this position granted, there next arise the questions:—Which religion is probably the best? Which religion will probably, if adopted, be most fertile in results? In the presence of such questions, I feel my own ignorance of the profounder aspects of religion. Nevertheless, the general character of religion is known to me, and this general character must be pronounced to be in disagreement with truth as deduced from moral philosophy. My ignorance of details incapacitates me altogether from deciding which religion is the best. But a practical consideration of the effects produced on the world by various religions down to the present day leads me to look on Christianity as probably the one that has made most proof of efficiency. Buddhism, indeed, considered theoretically and in its totality, with the philosophy which is apparently contained in it and the profoundness of its reasoning, rises far superior to any such shallow doctrines as Christianity has to offer. Buddhism is sublime in the extreme. Nevertheless, I venture to think that its influence as a religious system has been inferior to that of Christianity. No doubt it may have been influential in olden times; but I do not think it has much influence in our own day. Perhaps this insufficiency arises, not from any defect in Buddhism itself, but from a paucity of suitable men among those who direct its affairs. this may be. I know not. But this I know:—Christianity has enormous influence in Europe at the present day. True, this influence is no longer what it once was, but it is still great. Most Europeans, even those belonging to the upper classes, still believe in Christianity. Christianity is the foundation on which the sentiments, the thoughts of Europeans mostly rest, -the mother by whom those sentiments, those thoughts were given birth to.

Observe the difference between ka mo shiremasen at the end of this sentence, meaning "one cannot know whether," here freely rendered "perhaps," and ka shirimasen immediately below, meaning "I know not."—20. great has been its influence. It is true that the learned deny this influence, and assert that religion is powerless to produce thoughts and sentiments. But I, for my part, cannot regard it as so powerless a thing. Be this as it may, I cannot at this time and in this place discuss the question as to the degree of power which it may or may not possess. I will, therefore, only advance my personal opinion, which is that religion has considerable power, that it is indeed a prime factor of national sentiment and national thought. Its force is felt in Europe at the present day, even in the upper classes of society. These advantages it is that lead me to regard Christianity as, of all religions, the one that produces the greatest effects.

SPIRITUAL ENVIRONMENT.

(EXTRACT FROM A SERMON BY THE REV. YOKOI TOKIO.)

Of late years wide credence has been given in Western countries to the doctrine of evolution, which explains the method whereby heaven and earth and all that therein is arose,—the way in which the world was finished. According to this theory, the world at first contained none but the simplest types of life, which, thanks to the action of a suitable environment, resulted in the formation of our present complicated and beautiful world. suitable environment in question includes such things as natural selection and sexual selection, such facts as the struggle for existence and the survival of the fittest. The theory explains in detail the conditions of environment which are favourable to the development and evolution of living beings. Now, this action of the environment is exercised not only on the bodily frames of animals and plants. It is as clearly to be traced in the developtōta, 自然淘汰, "natural selection;" shiyū-tōta, 雌雄淘汰, "sexual selection;" yūshō-reppai, 優勝劣敗, "the struggle for existence" (including the idea of the survival of the fittest); tekishu-seizon, 適種生存, "the survival of the fittest;" and, close to the end, jika-dōchaku, 自家撞着, "self-confutation."—2. Jano is the Kyōto equivalent of the dano explained on p. 80.—3. Mono in this sentence is equivalent to koto in the next. The author was perhaps led to this somewhat exceptional use of mono by an instinctive dislike to the repetition of too many koto's in succession.—4. This mono denotes the doctrine of evolution.—5. People declare themselves to be full of good resolves, full of yearnings after virtue, and incapable, on selfexamination, of discovering anything particularly reprehensible in their actions. Their hearts, say they, have a good conscience, which recommends virtue to them and restrains them from vice, -a conscience which, if they follow its dictates, obviates all special need of reading the Bible and engaging in prayer. Nor is such a way of thinking an insignificant exception confined to Japan. It is to be found in the most civilised countries of the West,-in Germany and in England. There, too, men are apt to say that there is no use in religion, no use in hearing sermons preached, no use in reading the Bible, and that nothing is required beyond good intentions. being shone on by the sun, no need of being moistened by the rain, no need of spreading its roots into the soil? What would you think of this? Most assuredly you would say that even conceit has its limits, and that the forming of a wish by no means entails reaching the goal.

There are none among the sons of men who do not occasionally form virtuous resolves. Doubtless Ishikawa Goemon himself formed virtuous resolves some time during the course of his life. But good impulses cannot be said to constitute a virtuous man. We ourselves occasionally experience an extraordinary ardour of belief, an extraordinary craving to read the Bible, an irresistible attraction towards the society of believers. But such good impulses cannot be said to constitute us exemplary Christians. A mere intention is of no use. A mere intention will not make us attain to the goal. It is essential that we should be placed in an environment calculated to foster our good intentions and develop them. Who are the men who say that religion and the Bible are useless? They are those self-same ones, who, holding firmly to the doctrine of evolution, and asserting that neither animals, plants, nor human beings can develop without a favourable environment, lay the greatest stress on schools and on book-learning. It is only in matters of faith and morals that they assert the uselessness of a virtuous environment. Numerous as are the instances which the world affords of self-confutation, surely there never was a more extreme, a more terrible instance of self-confutation than this.

¶ 464. GIJŌ NO ICHI-HARAN.¹

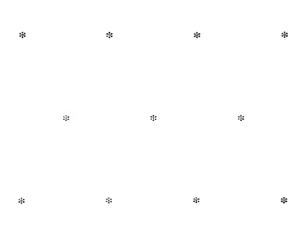

(Mr. Komuro Shigehiro presented a formal "question," calling on the Matsukata Cabinet-that now at the head of affairs-to declare whether it intended to redeem its promise of governing constitutionally in accordance with the national desire, and of purifying the public service. Such were not the appearances that presented themselves to the public eye, but on the contrary, jobbery and corruption everywhere, even to the extent of buying up members of the Diet. He then went on to make a long and violent speech, alleging that this same prime minister, when in office some years ago, had misused his power by interfering in the general elections. and had even caused the burning of houses and the murder of many innocent people. But now His Excellency resorted to subtler means,-to the corrupting influence of gold, to the sale of offices, and the purchase of members. What was the use of Japan's victories in war, if her honour in peace was thus to be sullied by a "trading cabinet," whose millionaire supporters were nothing better than loafers in frock-coats and thieves in tall hats?

When Mr. Komuro had sat down, the proceedings continued as follows:—)

This piece is taken from the verbatim report of the proceedings of the Imperial Diet on March 3rd, 1897, printed in the Supplement to the Kwampō, or "Official Gazette," of the following day. Of Mr. Komuro's speech we have given only a very brief summary; but the subsequent debate is reproduced in full. On such occasions, speaking as they do on the spur of the moment, the members fall into almost pure Colloquial. Set speeches, prepared beforehand, are far more

Mr. Kudō Kōkan (No. 197) [then rose and said]:—I have a question to address to Mr. Komuro, and should be glad of an answer. What I refer to is simply this:—observing what Mr. Komuro asserts to be going on, as he has just

Mr. Kudō Kōkan:—I have something to ask Mr. Komuro.

Mr. Komuro Shigehiro (No. 296):—I will not reply to a question asked about a question.

Mr. Kashiwada Seibun (No. 298):—I have an urgency motion to propose.

The President:—Mr. Kudō has not yet been given the right to speak. I cannot allow the elucidation of one question by means of another.

Mr. Kudō Kōkan:—I consider Mr. Komuro's speech a disgrace to this House. It is on that I would speak. You cannot refuse me permission to do so.

The President:—It will do as a motion, but not as a question.

Mr. Kudō Kōkan:—Well then, as an urgency motion,....

The President:—If it is an urgency motion, it will do.

Mr. Kashiwada Seibun:—Mr. President! Mr. President! The President:—I must ask you to wait, as I have already given Mr. Kudō the right to speak.

Mr. Kudō Kōkan then ascended the rostrum, and spoke as follows:—Referring to Mr. Komuro's speech, that speech of Mr. Komuro's is one which I can by no means let pass unnoticed. For this reason, what I desire is, once for all, to get an answer from him and thereupon to bring in a motion.

Written composition has alone been honoured in the Far-East, while the spoken speech has been left unpruned and unkempt.—4. Before yurushimasen, add ta no shitsumon wo in order to make the sense clear.

What I refer to is simply this:—he says that the purchase of members of the Diet, on which he continues harping, is a matter of public notoriety. Now, I too have the honour to sit in this legislative hall, and to be numbered among its members. That any one should have purchased members, -that is not the reason for my speaking thus. But that members should have allowed themselves to be purchased, -if any such there be thought to be among our three hundred members, -then truly are they creatures who have profaned the sacred character of this assembly. The drift of the speech we have just listened to is more or less this,—that in this assembly, among our members, are men who have been purchased, that the speaker intends to declare this fact plainly, but will not do so now in this place. Well! if such is really the case, I want to hear from Mr. Komuro in clear terms exactly who it is that has been purchased, and to what the circumstances really amount. The names of the members in question, their names together with their numbers, the sums they were purchased for, and the manner in which the transaction was arranged (loud laughter),—that is what I want to hear. desire Mr. Komuro kindly to answer this query. (A voice: "Such questions are useless.") If he replies, I will offer a If, without actually stating it,—without adducing facts,—he leaves the members of the Diet under the imputation of having been purchased, then he has insulted this assembly. I therefore offer a motion that Mr. Komuro be handed over to the Disciplinary Committee, with a request that suitable punishment be meted out to him.

Mr. Komuro Shigehiro:—Though I cannot reply to a question about a question, I may listen to it if it takes the shape of another motion. [I would, however, draw Mr. Kudō's attention to the fact that] what I have done has been simply to express my views, and to warn the government that such conduct was not permissible.

Mr. Kudō Kōkan:—The rationale of my motion is that if Mr. Komuro is unable to give the names of the members alleged to have been purchased, the statement as to their purchase is indubitably contrary to fact. To make an allegation as to the purchase of members in contradiction to the facts, is to insult this assembly,—conduct which must be submitted to the Disciplinary Committee. It must be submitted to the Disciplinary Committee, and the question as to the occurrence of these malpractices must be investigated. If any members have been purchased, then they have been purchased; but if none have been purchased, then the utterer of the libel must be punished. Therefore do I bring forward this motion. I beg that you will be so good as to second it. (A voice for voices: "I second it! I second it!")

Mr. Kashiwada Seibun:—Are you going to take a vote on the urgency motion just brought forward by Mr. Kudō?

The President:—Of course that is my intention.

Mr. Kashiwada Seibun:—In that case, I beg to second the motion.

Mr. Inoue Kakugorō:—Mr. Kudō has just spoken to us of handing over Mr. Komuro Shigehiro to the Disciplinary Committee. But what is the offence for which he is to be handed over to that Committee?

Mr. Kudō Kōkan:—For having slandered this assembly.

Mr. Inoue Kakugorō:—Good. Mr. Komuro Shigehiro had, I believe, thirty members to support him when he brought forward his question. Now, exactly whom do you propose to hand over to the Disciplinary Committee?

Mr. Kudō Kōkan: I propose to hand over the utterer of of the libel, the man who spoke just now,—I mean Mr. Komuro Shigehiro.

Mr. Inoue Kakugorō:—Mr. Komuro's speech made a more or less unpleasant impression on myself as well. But the question is, what degree of accuracy may there be in his assertion that such facts exist¹³? As for the statement that among our members are men who have been purchased, all the newspapers are saying so. They are all saying so. But is it true? I really cannot make up my mind as to whether it is true or false. If any one were to say, "You are a thief," or "Mr. Kudō is a thief," the reply would be, "I am no thief." No doubt. It is for the sake of the Imperial Diet, for the sake of our liberty of speech—that liberty by which we set more store than on aught elsethat I have supported the Popular Party rather than any other, and the Cabinet which had hitherto so strenuously championed the cause of free speech, hoping thereby to put a stop to the suspension of newspapers. That only Mr. Kudō, who had hitherto been preaching liberty, should himself now do such a thing as call out for the punishment of others, is truly the height of sadness. I beg of you, Mr. Kudō!—it is my earnest entreaty to you, Mr. Kudō!—do please withdraw this subject from discussion, in order to show to Japan, to our people, the extent to which we respect liberty. Such is my request to you.

Mr. Kudō Kōkan:—I certainly cannot withdraw it. I am of a different sort from the insincere trimmers¹⁰ like Mr. Inoue. If you have any question to ask me about this, I will answer it.

Mr. Inoue Kakugorō :- I have a question.

The President:—And the purport of Mr. Inoue's question is....?

Mr. Inoue Kakugorō:—The aim of my question is as follows. Could not Mr. Kudō be persuaded to withdraw his motion, out of respect for liberty? That is my question. (Some voices, "No good! no good!" Other voices, "Go on! go on!" The chamber is in an uproar.) You won't understand me, if you don't listen a little more quietly. Yes, indeed, liberty is an important thing....

Mr. Kudō Kōkan:—If you have no question to put, well and good.

The President:—I intend to take a vote on the question as to whether this is to be considered an urgency motion. A WORD ABOUT POETRY.

- ¶ 465. With very few exceptions, all the Japanese poetry that is esteemed by the educated is written in the Classical language of a thousand years ago. Even the ditties sung by singing-girls to the twanging of the samisen are usually more or less Classical in diction. Hence it is difficult to find verses written in the Colloquial that shall be worthy to place before the student. The following specimens are therefore offered with some diffidence. The chief positive characteristics of Japanese poetry are:
 - I. Its lines of five syllables and seven syllables. This is the basis on which all the existing varieties of the stanza are raised.
 - II. Its extreme shortness,—three, four, or five lines constituting an entire poem.
 - III. The terseness of the style, the poetical sentence often having no verb and being in fact rather an exclamation than an assertion. These liliputian poems remind a European of the sketches in which a Japanese artist will represent a flight of cranes passing before the moon, or a bamboo swaying in the wind, with but half-a-dozen bold touches of the pencil.

The chief negative feature of Japanese poetry is the absence of rhyme and of quantity. Long vowels, diphthongs, and syllables ending in n or m do indeed count double; but that is because they were originally pronounced separately, and are still figured separately in the Kana writing.

- ¶ 466. Here is a miniature ode,—what is called a hokku,—by the poetess Chiyo, who flourished in the last century:—
 - (5) Asagao ni
 - (7) Tsurube torarete,
 - (5) Morai-mizu!

lit. "Having had my well-bucket taken away by the convolvuli,—gift-water!" The meaning is this:—Chiyo, having gone to her well one morning to draw water, found that some tendrils of the convolvulus had twined themselves around the rope. As a poetess and a woman of taste, she could not bring herself to disturb the dainty blossoms. So, leaving her own well to the convolvuli, she went and begged water of a neighbour,—a pretty little vignette, surely, and expressed in five words. Whether the circumstance actually occurred or not, we cannot undertake to say; for Japanese poets are as much given to the invention of apocryphal esthetic incidents, as our own rhymesters of an earlier generation were to the invention of non-existent Chloes and Amelias.

- ¶ 467. Here is a hokku by the most famous of all hokku-writers, Bashō, a poet of the latter part of the seventeenth century. It is entitled Getsu-zen no Hotologisu, or "The Cuckoo in Front of the Moon," and is as follows:—
 - (5) Hito-koe wa,
 - (7) Tsŭki ga naita ka P
 - (5) Hototogisu!

lit. "As for the single note, did the moon sing?—Cuckoo!" The poet means that, startled by the note of the cuckoo, he looked up in the direction whence it came,—to see, however, no cuckoo, but the brightly shining moon. Could it then be the moon that was the songstress? No, it must be the cuckoo after all.

- ¶ 468. Japanese poets are fond of jokes, puns, and whimsical notions. The already-mentioned Bashō was riding along a country lane one day, when his groom, who afterwards rose to be the well-known poet Kikaku, espied a red dragon-fly, and cried out in verse
 - (5) Aka-tombo-
 - (7) Hane we tottara,
 - (5) Tō-garashi!
 - i.e., "Pluck off the wings of a red dragon-fly, and you have a cayenne pepper-pod." But Bashō reproved him for so cruel a fancy, and corrected the verse thus:
 - (5) Tō-garashi—
 - (7) Hane wo tsüketara,
 - (5) Aka-tombo!
 - i. e., " Λ dd wings to a cayenne pepper-pod, and you have a red dragon-fly."
- ¶ 469. The following kyōka, or "comic poem," of thirty-one syllables, contains a pun on the words go-bu go-bu, "five parts and five parts," i.e., "half and half," and gobu-gobu, an onomatope for the gurgling sound made by a liquid in issuing from a bottle:—
 - (5) Kimi mo nomi,
 - (7) Boku mo nomu kara,
 - (5) Wari-ai mo
 - (7) Go-bu go-bu to tsugi-
 - (7) Dasu taru no sake!

This may mean either: "Oh! the liquor from the cask, poured out in equal halves, because, as you are drinking and I too am drinking, proportion must be observed," or "Oh! the liquor from the cask poured out gurgle-gurgle, because, etc."

- ¶ 470. The following contains no pun, but has a delicate touch of satire :-
 - (5) Hototogisu
 - (7) Jiyū jizai ni
 - Kiku sato wa,-
 - (7) Saka-ya ni san-ri,
 - Tōfu-ya ni ni-ri! (7)

i.e., "The village where one may list undisturbedly to the cuckoo's song is-----three leagues from the grog-shop, and two from the bean-curd shop!"-Notice in passing that this stanza of thirty-one syllables is the vehicle of the greater portion of the Classical poetry of Japan.

- ¶ 471. The dodoitsu generally consists of three lines of seven syllables and one of five. Take, for instance,
 - (7) Hito wa sŭki-zuki.

 - (7) Horete iru uchā,1
 - (5) Aki-mekura.
 - (7) Shote wa jodan,
 - (7) Nakagora giri de,
 - (7) Ima ja tagai no
 - (5) Fitsu to jitsu.
 - (7) Konna kokoro ni

 - (7) Shita no mo omae.
 - (7) Ima-sara akite wa,
 - (5) Karvaisō.

Zehi mo nashi.5

Even a board stuck up and inscribed with the words "It is strictly prohibited to pluck these blossoms" is useless as against the wind, which cannot read.

¶ 473. We will end up by a longer poem of a form called Sendai-bushi, which, though containing two Book Language forms, is otherwise easy. It is put into the mouth of one who was exiled to a small island beyond the stormy reach of sea called the Genkai-nada, to the north-west of Kyūshū:-

(7) Tori mo kosanai

(7) Genkai-nada wo

Itowanedo,-(5)

(7) Ato ni nokorishi

Tsuma va ko wa,

(7) Do shite tsitki-hi wo

(5) Okuru yara*?

I care not for myself, who am (8) Farareru kono mi wa, sent across the Genkai over which even the birds do not pass. But the wife who have behind.—how may spending the months and day-?

2. It is to be understood that, though no longer enamoured of his choice, the lover had remained faithful to her through a feeling of honour,-a feeling which was rewarded by the eventual growth of solid mutual affection. - 3. In the little book from which this verse is taken, there is, opposite the lines, a picture of a girl weeping and stretching out imploring hands to a man who is turning his back on her.-4. Lit. "positively break not!" kataku being equivalent to kesshite -5. Equivalent to shikata ga nai .- 6. This line has eight syllables instead of seven, by a poetical license.—7. Nokorishi in Classical for nokotta.--8. Yara comes from Classical va aran, which is equivalent to the Colloquial de aro ka?

ANGLO-JAPANESE VOCABULARY

OVER 1700 USEFUL WORDS.

(Remember that this is only a vocabulary, not a dictionary. The fundamental differences of conception and expression which separate English idiom from Japanese, render it an impossible task to assign equivalents that shall be satisfactory in all contexts. The student is accordingly referred for details to Messrs. Satow and Ishibashi's excellent little "English-Yapanese Dictionary of the Spoken Lunguage.")

¶ 477. ADDITIONS

AND

CORRECTIONS.

Page 104, line 10, and Vocab. s. v.—Some modern authorities take oku in the sense of "one hundred millions," and $ch\bar{o}$ in the sense of "one oku of oku," i.e. apparently 10,000,000,000,000.

Page 142, line 18.—For sumori, read tsumori.

Page 330, line 6 from end.—For tatte, read tatete. In last line of ditto, the sense would be still clearer were the word sakan inserted after naka-naka.

Page 332, line 3.—For attate, read atatte.

Page 461, s. v. "I."—For watakūshi, read watakŭshi.

Ditto, s. v. "June," for roku-gatsu read roku-gwatsu.

Page 474.—The first word of the Vocabulary should be, not a, but \bar{a} .

On ditto, for ai-nikui read ai-niku.

Page 540, s. v. Sugiru.—Correct segiru to sugiru.
